4/22/2016	9pm KFVE	42-INCH WATERMAIN	42-INCH WATERMAIN. It's hidden deep under several miles of Dillingham Boulevard, a water main big enough to provide water for Honolulu, Waikiki and Hawaii Kai. The 42-inch main was completed about 11 years ago, after ten years of work that involved tearing up the street. Now, Hawaii News Now has learned that the Board of Water Supply will have to move parts, if not large segments of the main to make way for the rail transit project.	0:02:04

4/23/2016	630 HNN News KFVE	WATERMAIN WON'T MOVE	WATERMAIN WON'T MOVE. Project leaders say they won't have to move the entire 42-inch main. It runs longitudinally down Dillingham, but it's not perfectly straight down the middle, and neither is our guideway. So the two may criss-cross, and where the two conflict, they'll have to move the water line out of the way. The rail and the water main will be kept ten feet apart. The contractor who wins the bid to build this section will help design the plans to do that and there is money in the budget for relocation. Rail officials don't expect the water main issue to cause delays or unexpected costs.	0:00:10

6/17/2016	9pm KFVE, 630 HNN News KFVE	THINK ABOUT IT RAIL ROUTE CHANGES	THINK ABOUT IT RAIL ROUTE CHANGES. The rail situation has now officially entered the twilight zone. For those too young to remember, "The Twilight Zone" was a great old TV show and the term "twilight zone" is defined in some places as another dimension, a state of surrealism. Surely that's where we are today with HART as prices keep going up, the supposed routes keep changing, and the people in charge say "I don't know" when asked what's up?! One idea of moving the town placement of the rail from Dillingham Boulevard to Nimitz Highway could possibly add another 10-years to the timetable. And this is already a project that, in its current state, is not slated for completion until at least 2024. Other options including ending the rail at Middle Street, which would seem to defeat the purpose of people using it to get all the way to ala MOANA.
