After 60 years, a tradition for local students is coming to an end. Camp Palomar School is set to close at the end of the month because of budget cuts. San Diego Unified expects to save $4.6-million by cutting Camp Palomar, along with two other field trip programs. Thousands of six graders go to Camp Palomar every year to learn about nature and culture. Staff members hope the school reopens again in the future. Right now, district officials say it will be closed for at least two years.
