Public opinion ran high with news of a federal investigation into the alleged use of steroids by baseball players. The steroids scandal involved the Astros starting pitcher Roger Clemens who is considered one of baseball's preeminent pitchers. Brian McNamee accused Clemens of using steroids. He claims that he injected Clemens several times with steroids and human growth hormones. Clemens repeatedly denied using steroids during a five-hour deposition in early February. Clemens, McNamee, former Astro Andy Pettitte and Houstonian Chuck Knoblauch testified behind closed doors at a hearing on Capitol Hill in late February. Clemens' former nanny Lillian Strain turned out to be a central figure in the February 13th Congressional testimony. Clemens and his legal team were asked to provide the contact number for the former, and they did but only after first speaking to Strain. Strain said she does not believe Clemens took steroids. In late February, news surfaced about a Congressional Committee taking steps toward launching a criminal investigation as to whether or not Clemens and McNamee committed perjury by lying to Congress in their testimony. Meantime, the Houston Astros announced that a ten-year personal services contract between the Houston Astros and Clemens will be honored by In an interview on ABC's Nightline, former major league baseball player and author Jose Canseco said Roger Clemens is not lying in his denial of steroid use. Canseco said he has never seen the Clemens use steroids or talk about using steroids. He said he believes Clemens told the truth during congressional hearings.

In the fourth quarter of 2007, 13 Undercover reporter Wayne Dolcefino presented a series of reports, the result of a two-month 13 Undercover hidden camera investigation. The reports raised serious questions of ethics concerning one of the region's most powerful elected officials, Harris County Commissioner for Precinct 4 Jerry Eversole. The reports documented Eversole's questionable campaign money expenditures, including golfing and a Florida vacation and his use County staff and resources for political campaign purposes. The District Attorney's Office said that it would conduct an investigation. LULAC sent a letter District Attorney Chuck Rosenthal demanding action. Late in the fourth quarter, the District Attorney's Office said that it would conduct an investigation.

In early January, 13 Undercover reports also revealed questionable dealings surrounding the design of his 3,700 square-foot house in the Heights valued at $639,000. The custom-built house was designed by architect Leroy Hermes, whose biggest work was for the county-owned Reliant Stadium complex. In 1998, the county also hired Hermes Architects to design a new exhibition building then known as the Astrodomain complex. Hermes was also contracted by Precinct 4 for the design of the new county jail. Three months after the design of Eversole's house, Precinct 4 contracted Hermes for a $25,000 building assessment study of Precinct 4's regional office. In 2007, Hermes was awarded the job to design of a new minimum security facility on Atascosita Road representing millions more in government contracts. Eversole's calendar shows a quail hunting trip and games of golf in San Antonio with Hermes, arranged by county staff. The commissioner refused to answer questions from Dolcefino. He hired an Austin lobbyist Bill Miller to answer questions from the media. Eversole's campaign treasurer, who happens to be his son, is also refused to answering questions from Dolcefino.

On February 13, Dolcefino filed reports on the contracting practices of County officials. 13 Undercover's investigation revealed "buddy system" deals and contracting practices among county officials and associates. The reports focused on how some Sheriff's Department officials and Houston Community College instructors working under the county jail education program are benefiting from exclusive deals for products and services rendered by county inmates. The products and services include barbeque grills, auto and shoe repair, welding services at half-price. Reverend Robert Jefferson called it "nothing but slavery...slavery plantation mentality..." One of these individuals benefiting from the special deals is Captain Jim Albers, who until recently ran the inmate programs for the Sheriff's Office, and Charlie Bertani, one of Harris County Sheriff Thomas' biggest political contributors. Sheriff Tommy Thomas refused to answer questions from Dolcefino.

On February 14, 13 Undercover reports revealed questionable contracts and deals involving the repair and construction of a metal fence using inmate labor at Sheriff's Thomas' 80-acre ranch in Colorado County. Dolcefino interviewed two jail inmate program instructors who admitted going to the ranch to advise the sheriff on the kind of materials needed for the fence. One instructor admitted that he contracted with the sheriff to assist in building of the fence. 13 Undercover's investigation showed that inmates did 206 jobs for the instructors at the jail. It also showed that SSS, an Austin County company from which the gate opener on the sheriff's fence was bought, has had county contracts, including one with the Sheriff's Office for jail door plates.

In January, 13 Undercover investigative reports focused on real estate county contracts and questionable dealings and practices that have existed for years. Harris County officials denied any knowledge of these. The reports focused on the various big players connected to Houston developers Michael Surface and Andy Schatte, who face federal indictments for conspiracy to bribe a city official, wire fraud and lying to federal officials. 13 Undercover reports revealed the inside political workings and relationships of high-stakes players, including Leroy Hermes and county officials. Hermes denied any involvement in illegal business deals. Harris County Attorney Mike Stafford was asked to conduct an investigation regarding Eversole's son, Lance Eversole, who made money on related business deals as a legal advisor to Surface. Ethics watchdog Fred Lewis opined that Stafford should recuse himself.

In late February 13 Undercover report, County Commissioner for Precinct 1 El Franco Lee admitted that his engineering firm has on one or two occasions done business outside Harris County with Keystone, which is a company founded by Surface and Schatte. Schatte has been a Lee political supporter for many years and is still on the commissioner's campaign finance committee. When asked if he sees this as "trouble," the commissioner replied, "I see it as an issue, but it's not an issue that touched me at all." Lewis commented that Lee's attitude shows an indifference to the seriousness of the corruption allegations.

On February 19, as a result of this investigative series, Harris County Commissioners announced that they are preparing to adopt a policy calling for elected officials and department heads to file financial disclosures.

Harris County District Attorney Chuck Rosenthal was forced to resign in the face of an e-mail scandal resulted in a criminal investigation, and contempt charges associated with a civil rights case.

The contempt charges stemmed from the D.A.'s office mishandling of a civil rights violation case filed by brothers Sean and Erik Ibarra. The brothers sued in federal court for $5 million, alleging civil rights violation and wrongful arrest. D.A. Rosenthal's e-mails were subpoenaed by the court as part of the lawsuit. Rosenthal's e-mails were made public. The e-mails revealed romantic, pornographic and racially-charged content. Subsequently, Rosenthal faced contempt charges in the Ibarra case for his deletion of 2,500 subpoenaed e-mails. He was subpoenaed for a contempt hearing

In early January, Harris County leaders asked the State Attorney General to open a criminal investigation into the D.A.'s misconduct, stemming from the release of 700 e-mails from the D.A.'s office computer. The focus of the investigation was expected to include e-mails proving that Rosenthal had staffers working on his campaign during the work day and e-mail attachments with pornographic, racist and other offensive content. Rosenthal blamed his own stupidity and apologized for poor judgment but offered little explanation to County Judge Emmett as to why such materials were on his office computer. The D.A. faced mounting political pressure from Republicans and Houston Ministers Against Crime and other community activists called for his resignation. On January 31, community leaders staged a protest demanding Rosenthal's resignation. On February 15, ten days before a scheduled contempt hearing, Rosenthal resigned. Reports indicated that Rosenthal admitted to a federal judge that his judgment was impaired by "the particular combination of drugs" prescribed to him in the past. Rosenthal's pleadings in the federal case are sealed. Upon Rosenthal's resignation, the Attorney General's investigation ended. Legal observers raised the question of what effect Rosenthal's admission of impaired judgment will have on criminal cases in Harris County. On March 14, Governor Rick Perry named U.S. Attorney and former Harris County Assistant D.A. Kenneth Magidson to succeed Rosenthal. In early March, Rosenthal was subpoenaed to testify in the Ibarra case but never took the stand because the case was settled. Harris County Commissioners approved a $1.7 million settlement. The case did not dismiss Rosenthal's contempt of court case stemming from his deletion of subpoenaed e-mails. On March 28, a judge ruled that Rosenthal is in contempt of court and order him to pay a $19,000 fine. Harris County officials now need to determine whether the burden of paying the fine falls on Rosenthal or taxpayers.

The lawsuit that indirectly lead to the resignation of Harris County D.A. Chuck Rosenthal was settled in early March. Harris County Commissioners approved a $1.7 million dollar settlement in a case stemming from the arrest of brothers Sean and Erik Ibarra. They had claimed that their civil rights were violated during an undercover drug raid at their neighbors' home six years ago. The case began with the arrest of the two brothers and the confiscation of video they shot of the raid. The brothers sued in federal court for $5 million, alleging civil rights were violation and wrongful arrest. D.A. Rosenthal's e-mails were subpoenaed by the court as part of the lawsuit. Rosenthal's e-mails were made public, and they revealed romantic, pornographic and racially-charged content. The political fallout as a result of the e-mail scandal eventually forced Rosenthal to resign from office. The Ibarra civil rights suit settlement did not dismiss Rosenthal's contempt of court case stemming from his deletion of 2,500 subpoenaed e-mails. The judge ordered Rosenthal to pay a fine. Officials said they need to determine whether the burden of paying the $19,000 fine falls on Rosenthal or Harris County tax payers.

Members of a Grand Jury were angry that their hard work was all for naught – all because of a paperwork mistake. The Grand jury was investigating two cases, including an arson case involving State Supreme Court Justice David Medina and his wife Francesca Medina. The Medina home was destroyed by fire last June. The fire also destroyed a neighbor's house and caused $12,000 in damage to another home. Francesca Medina was at home on the night of the fire. On January 17, the Grand Jury's heard the case of the Medina house fire and indicted Fran Medina on arson and Judge Medina on a lesser charge of tampering. District Attorney Chuck Rosenthal's office tossed out the indictments, stating that the Grand Jury was not properly empanelled due a paperwork error. Judge Jim Wallace said the D.A.'s Office dropped the ball by not filing the proper paperwork. Some observers claimed that the judge got preferential treatment. Several members of the Grand Jury protested publicly through media interviews. Medina's lawyer Terry Yates asked a judge to hold the Grand Jurors in contempt, but the judge refused. The Grand Jurors alleged that there was a cover-up and said that politics is behind the dismissals. The case drew more public criticism of D.A. Rosenthal, already under fire for the e-mail scandal and alleged mishandling of the Ibarra civil rights case. In late January, the Medina's attorney announced that he is pursuing having all public records of the arson case against his clients erased, a process which could take months.

A judge denied ABC-13's request for e-mails from the Harris County Sheriff's Department. The judge ruled that the Sheriff's Office is not in contempt of court for storing e-mails on a backup tape and that the e-mails are not subject to release under the Freedom of Information Act. The judge also ruled that ABC-13 could not amend its request to include that the e-mails be restored to Freedom of Information status. ABC-13's attorney had argued that government records are subject to public information requests.

The dispute began in January at the heels of D.A. Chuck Rosenthal's email scandal when a team of lawyers began working on the development of an e-mail policy for Harris County and the Flood Control District. Harris County Judge Ed Emmett said he believes that county e-mails should be kept as long as possible. In January, Sheriff Tommy Thomas ordered the destruction of most e-mails after just 14 days. The order came in the Rosenthal's e-mail controversy and in the midst of a 13 Undercover investigation of the Sheriff's Office. 13 Undercover filed a suit against Sheriff Thomas to prevent the policy change. Both sides agreed to a temporary injunction. The Sheriff's Office was ordered to keep all e-mails and restore deleted ones. A court date is set for June. County Attorney Mike Stafford cited Texas law, which states that Texans "do not give their public servants the right to decide what is good for the people to know and what is not good for them to know."

The Sheriff's Department stopped deleting e-mails but refused to turn over all of its e-mails to Undercover 13. John Edwards, the attorney representing Eyewitness News in the case, said that the Sheriff does not want to turn over e-mails deemed personal in nature. The County Attorney sought an opinion with the Attorney General's Office in Austin. Among Sheriff's Department e-mails turned over to Eyewitness News was one containing a racially-charged cartoon, which Commissioner El Franco Lee described as "...denigrating..." and "...degrading."

Hillary Clinton won the Texas Primary and was also victorious in Ohio and Rhode Island. Barack Obama won Vermont. According to ABC News, Obama's delegate count is 1,566 and Clinton's is 1,457—with 2,025 delegates needed for the nomination. It was a narrow Texas victory for Clinton, and some votes may have come from Republican voters. There were reports that many Republicans were asked to vote for Clinton. Political analyst Dr. Richard Murray assessed this as a political strategy carried out in response to surveys indicating that Senator Obama would win votes from self-described independents and Republicans.

On the date of the Texas Primary, there were reports of confusion on the part of many voters as to where to vote. Some voted under the wrong party. There were reports of voting irregularities. There was also confusion surrounding the caucus process. The evening proved long for many caucus participants, who came out record numbers. Thousands of Democrats spent hours in crowded facilities, waiting for precinct conventions to start. The caucus sessions continued late into the night at numerous voting sites. State Representative Sylvester Turner commented that it's time to do away with the Texas' two-step process.

Headed for a runoff on April 8 are the Republican races for district attorney and U.S. Congressional District 22.
