EMPLOYMENT	Noticiero Univision	5/6/2016	11:30 PM	1:41	One economist says today's unemployment report makes it much less likely that the Federal Reserve will raise interest rates between now and the presidential election in November. The government says employers added 160,000 jobs in April, the lowest number in seven months. Chris Williamson of Markit says the numbers add to the indications that economic weakness is lingering into the second quarter of the year. Fed policy makers had earlier indicated that they could raise rates twice this year. Hispanic unemployment jumped to 6.1%.
EMPLOYMENT	Despierta America	6/3/2016	7:00 AM	:30	U.S. employers drastically slowed their hiring in May, adding just 38,000, the fewest in more than 5 years and a sign of concern after the economy barely grew in the first three months of the year. At the same time, the unemployment rate tumbled to 4.7 percent from 5 percent, the Labor Department said Friday, its lowest point since November 2007. The rate fell for a problematic reason: Nearly a half-million jobless Americans stopped looking for work and so were no longer officially counted as unemployed.

EMPLOYMENT	Despierta America	5/6/2016	7:00 AM	:23	U.S. employers pulled back on hiring in April after a streak of solid monthly gains, adding 160,000 jobs, the fewest in seven months. The unemployment rate remained at a low of 5 percent, roughly the same level it has been since the fall. The job gain was down from the average increase of 200,000 over the past three months, which is the softest three-month pace since October. The slowdown may raise concerns that weak U.S. economic growth has discouraged some employers from hiring. The economy's growth has slumped to a sluggish 1 percent annual rate since October. But wage gains showed signs of picking up. Average hourly pay rose 2.5 percent from a year earlier, above the sluggish 2 percent pace that has been typical for the past six years.
