arts	10/02/18			15	Morning Amp	Film	The (In)Justice for All Film Festival (IFAFF) brings audiences films that explore America’s criminal justice system – police, courts, and corrections – and the industries that profit from it. We share the stories of the millions that are relegated to second-class citizenship under an unforgiving system and highlight better ways that exist in other countries and even best practices right here in America. Daryle Brown is the executive director and organizer of the (In)Justice For All Film Festival and Darcy Carter - organizer, manager of film submissions and programming content of the (In)Justice For All Film Festival. They join the Amp Settlement is a meditation on access, territory, and migration, Settlement’s roving sculptural installation, public programs, and series of artists books uncover the material and human connections between Chicago’s North and West side communities and the histories that bind them. The installation—a series of ghostly architectural sculptures raised high above the northern tip of Lincoln Park—evokes the city’s history of human and material displacement. Marea continues to support more marginalized voices represented in the electronic music scene, and isn't afraid to vocalise her political and social views, ultimately working to help diversify the community. The Black Madonna sat down with Jill Hopkins to discuss her career and the We Still Believe parties that still sell out all over the world.
arts	10/11/18	15	Morning Amp	Featured interview	Two Black police officers patrol the notorious neighborhood on Chicago's long-neglected south-east side known to locals as "Terror Town." As veteran cops who "happen to be Black", these men must navigate the streets, the policies of policing, and the deeply conflicted roles that they play in the lives of those that they are supposed to "serve and protect." Set in 2016, these officers find themselves at ground zero when long-suppressed evidence surfaces (via the media) illuminating an officer involved shooting on the very streets that they patrol. Jesse Menendez spoke with Shepsu Aakhu about the play and the Exavier Pope is host of the Suit UP Podcast, a sports legal analyst, and an award winning sports and entertainment attorney.
