Presidential candidate Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-Vt.) reacted this morning to the deadly Orlando shooting, telling moderator Chuck Todd, "It's horrific, it's unthinkable. And just hopes go out to all those who were shot that they can recover."

Sen. Sanders also shared that he plans to meet with former Sec. Hillary Clinton this Tuesday evening to discuss her campaign because he wants "to get a sense of what kind of platform she will be supporting."

Sen. Jeff Flake (R-Ariz.) also reacted to the Orlando shooting -- now the deadliest mass shooting in U.S. history: "Obviously a horrible, horrible tragedy. And every one that happens is one too many."

Joining the show this morning for insight and analysis were NBC News' Tom Brokaw; radio talk show host Hugh Hewitt; MSNBC's Joy Reid; and The Cook Political Report's Amy Walter.

NOTE: "Meet the Press" did not air in some markets this morning due to NBC News special coverage.

Presidential race with Republicans increasingly nervous about Donald Trump, that he may be blowing what is a winnable election.

I'll talk to Republican Senator Jeff Flake of Arizona, who's been sharply critical of Trump. And then there's Bernie Sanders, he'll be joining me and I'll ask him whether he's ready to endorse Hillary Clinton and whether he's still an active candidate for president.

David Plouffe was the architect of President Obama's 2008 campaign. And Steve Schmidt ran Senator John McCain's 2008 operation right up against Plouffe.
