2021 4th Quarterly Report
Posted to the Public File on Jan. 10, 2022

Source Diversity Numbers

Reporters ask sources to self-identify their gender, race/ethnicity, where they live/work, and other demographic and professional information that's relevant to the story. Our goal for 2021 is that 45% of sources are women each quarter and 35% are people of color.

GENDER

Female: 45% | Male: 54% | Nonbinary: <1% | Unknown/various: 1%

RACE/ETHNICITY

Asian: 3% | Asian/White: <1% | Black: 26% | Black/Middle Eastern: <1% | Latinx: 6% | Middle Eastern: 1% | Native American: 3% | White: 46% | Unknown/multiple people: 15%

LOCATION

Davidson County: 63% | Middle Tennessee (outside Nashville): 13% | Tennessee (outside Middle Tennessee): 9% | Outside Tennessee: 9% | Unknown: 6%

Coverage Narrative

Key topics for the quarter included:

- Rutherford County's juvenile court. In partnership with ProPublica, producer Meribah Knight published a yearlong investigation into a system that illegally arrested and detained youths in Rutherford County for years, and how the adults in charge are still in power. The story shed new light on a big local story and sparked nationwide interest, including calls for federal investigations. We will continue reporting on this topic in 2022.
- COVID-19 special session. The state legislature reconvened for two special sessions this quarter, including one that focused on limiting the government's ability to implement COVID-19 restrictions. State politics reporter Blaise Gainey and health care reporter Blake Farmer covered the various new laws and their implications in the state, including a series of lawsuits over new rules regarding vaccine mandates.
- More natural disasters. Tornadoes ripped through Kentucky and parts of Middle Tennessee in mid-December, sending the newsroom into breaking news mode overnight. Our reporters went to Kingston Springs and southern Kentucky to cover the damage, and afterward, environmental reporter Caroline Eggers started producing enterprise stories about what we know and don't know about the tornado outbreak.
- The rising cost of housing. The newsroom produced many stories this quarter on one of the most immediate issues facing many Nashvillians, thanks in part to Metro reporter Ambriehl Crutchfield making housing a focus of her beat. She and others reported stories on rising rent prices, tension and celebrations over new affordable housing, and a mobile home park that was sold to developers.
