For many Spanish speaking Dodgers fans, it wouldn’t be Dodgers baseball without Jaime Jarrin. The Hall of Fame broadcaster is known as “the Spanish voice of the Los Angeles Dodgers” and has been behind the microphone for 58 years. Vista L.A. went into the booth with the legend himself and his son Jorge Jarrin, who is following in his father’s footsteps.

Win or lose, there's no denying the love Latinos have for baseball in Los Angeles. It's a cultural, captivating history and the focus of "Peloteros in Paradise: A Los Angeles Béisbol Story," a new exhibit at LA Plaza de Cultura y Artes.

THE HISTORY OF MEXICAN AMERICANS & BASEBALL IN L.A.

Since the 1920s, Mexican-Americans have gravitated to baseball fields throughout Los Angeles as a source of recreation and a social safe haven. Vista L.A.’s Patricia Lopez explores this history with Dr. Richard Santillan, who has written several books on the subject.

BOXING’S GOLDEN GIRL

In 2005, we discovered Seniesa Estrada, an 11-year-old aspiring boxer who stood just 4'8", a tiny kid with a lot of heart in the ring. Fast forward to today, that champ-in-the-making is now a 23-year-old who's still fighting, and who could be L.A.'s first "Golden Girl" of boxing.
