Program Title:	Khaki Coast: How the Panhandle Helped Win WWII
Episode #:	n/a
Episode Title:	n/a
Short Description:	A look at the role military training in the Pahnandle played in the war and in people's lives.
Long Description:	Produced in high-definition, this original WSRE documentary describes how the Florida Panhandle evolved from the influx of the military during World War II. The Panhandle was home to five major training military bases, extending from Tallahassee in the east to Pensacola in the west. These installations made major contributions to the war effort, and ensured that the military's influence in the region would remain strong through the present day. The program was made possible by a grant from the Florida Humanities Council and The National Endowment for the Arts.

Short Description:	While best known for his Indy car career, Danny Sullivan has raced in other series including Formula One and NASCAR, and he sits down for an-depth interview about his life and career on this edition of Conversations with Jeff Weeks.
Long Description: Genres:	It's known as the "Spin and Win", perhaps one of the more dramatic moments in motor racing. It was the 1985 Indianapolis 500, and Danny Sullivan passed the legendary Mario Andretti for the lead when, at over 200 miles per hour, Sullivan's car spun completely around. Amazingly, he saved it. That in and of itself is remarkable, but more impressive is that Sullivan would re-group and go on to win the race and have his likeness etched into history on the Borg Warner trophy. Short Description: Long Description:	A look at the role military training in the Pahnandle played in the war and in people's lives. Produced in high-definition, this original WSRE documentary describes now the Fiorida Pahnandle evolved from the influx of the military during World War II. The Pahhandle was home to five major training military bases, extending from Tallahassee in the east to Pensacola in the west. These installations made major contributions to the war effort, and ensured that the military's influence in the region would remain strong through the present day. The program was made possible by a grant from the Florida Humanities Council and The National Endowment for the Arts.
