KUNC newcasters also provided ways for people to assist outside of the affected area. This brought the community together in Weld, Larimer, and Boulder Counties.

A wildfire on Monday afternoon has prompted an evacuation order in Boulder County. Evacuations are in place for Pine Brook Hills and the area west of Foothils Community Park. Hikers are also being evacuated from Mount Sanitas. The Boulder County Sheriff's Department issued an evacuation order around 2:12 p.m. KUNC Newcasters and reporters delivered vital information in real time serving Boulder County. 12/20/2022 45 Seconds Things Considered & 4PM, 5PM, and 6PM Amorning Edition / All 10:00AM, 8:00AM, 12/19/2022 Things Considered 4:30PM, 45 Seconds Secure 2:2 p.m. CUMC Newscasters and reporters delivered vital information in real time serving Boulder County.

Issue 82: Water Conservation Across Colorado and the West. KUNK has a dedicated reporting desk that focuses exclusively on water conservation and the Colorad River continues to experience declines, the ability for dams to generate power and agricultural impacts continue to load and water conservation and the Colorad River Watershed. As the Colorad River continues to experience declines, the ability for dams to generate power and agricultural impacts continue to load for closures on water and water conservation issues becasue our community in Boulder, Larimer, Weld, and the Denver metro area have provided feedback that this is a crucial issue they care about.

12/21/2022	Morning Edition / All Things Considered	7:45AM, 9:45AM & 4:44PM	4 minutes 30 seconds	The Ogallala Aquifer is a wast, underground water supply that lies beneath 8 states, including parts of Eastern Colorado. Many farmers on the eastern plains depend on it as a reliable source of water to irrigate their crops. But the aquifer is drying up. The future of what it means for KUNC's argicultural listeners was a focus of this story.
	Morning Edition / All	7:45AM. 9:45AM &		New forecasts for the Colorado River paint a grim picture. Climate change and steady demand are shrinking the water supply for 40 million people. At the nation's largest dams, that means the ability to generate hydropower could soon be under threat. KUNC reporters introduced us to the Glen Canyon Dam. Once a mighty piece of Western infrastructure, now possibly unable to 12/19/2022	Morning Edition	6:45AM, 8:45AM	3 minutes, 45 seconds	It is going to take real cuts to everyone': Leaders meet to decide the future of the Colorado River. Policymakers from the seven states that use water from the Colorado River gathered in Las Vegas to discuss its future as climate change shrinks supply. KUNC newscasters and editors helped craft stories and important fasts from this conference.

12/22/2022	Morning Edition / All Things Considered	6:45AM, 8:45AM & 3:44PM	4 minutes 10 seconds	Colorado River Compact. The Colorado River's foundational legal document turns 100 years old this month. The agreement among seven western states was groundbreaking for its time. However, the Compact continues to contribute to the southwest's water crisis. KUNC reporters continue to report and analyze that main points of the Compact and get the facts to the listeners in Weld, Larimer, and Boulder Counties.

ue #4: Indigenous and Underserved Communities' Stories. Part of KUNC's commintment to Diversity, Equity, and Inclusion means we dedicate a portion of our reporting to issues of erserved and marginalized communites. As a critical news service in Weld, Boulder, and Larimer counties, our reporting on these communites serves the listener by educating them on issues they may not have realized, and gives a voice to those communities that are often ignored and overlooked.

12/23/2022	Morning Edition / All Things Considered	6:30AM, 8:30AM, 9:30AM & 4PM, 5PM, and 6PM	55 seconds	The number of Indian boarding schools in Colorado grows as researchers continue livrestigation. Colorado was home to roughly 10 schools that assimilated Native students during the late 1800s and early 1900s, according to a new report by History Colorado. The U.S. government established the schools to forcibly dismantle the cultural identities of young Native Americans. A Department of Interior investigation released earlier this year identified five schools in Colorado.

It's been some 80 years since thousands of Japanese Americans were sent to live in internment camps in our region. Now the National Park Service is developing plans to restore one of those sites. KUNC reporter Emma VandenEinde reported on the plan a 3 part series, Saving Amache'.
12/9/2022	Morning Edition / All Things Considered	7:45AM, 9:45AM & 4:44PM	4 minutes, 4 seconds	Native Student Grant. Native students have the lowest college attendance rates of any ethnic and racial group. One of the biggest barriers is the cost. To tackle this, Colorado lawmakers passed a bill last year that requires state schools to offer in-state tution to any student who is a member of a Native Nation with historical test to the state regardless of where they live. One public university took this a step further, removing this financial barrier altogether.
