				Legislation is taking effect across the country that restricts transgender kids and their parents regarding gender-affirming healthcare How will these bills affect trans kids' long-term health? While we can't predict the outcomes for these kids, we can look to the people who lived most of their lives without gender-affirming care to understand the repercussions. While access to trans-focused healthcare has increased in recent years, it is still very difficult for people to find, especially in rural areas. The cause of those difficulties isn't simply geographic;

Why are women in rural places being incarcerated for substances at such high rates? What can communities do to intervene and help? What resources are available? We explore these troublesome questions and find some equally troubling answers. We hear from a former substance misuser who shares a solution that helped change her life, and how her struggle with substances is a required background for her becoming a care provider to women currently trying to stay sober. And we learn how her affliction has impacted other care providers in her community.	43:55:00	10/21/2023	11:00 AM
Women's Healthcare	Who Will Be With Me at the End?	Lavery	Lis Jones & Others	Hospice care is a somewhat misunderstood medical practice in this country. People often think it's all about dying, or the opposite-keeping a dying patient alive. Neither of these perceptions are accurate. In this episode, we are focusing on what hospice care entails by sitting down with the people who provide it – hospice nurses.
