- Health & Wellness: We hear about the dangers of high temperatures all the time, but as we approach hotter days in the coming days and weeks, Dr. Mitchell Wainwright of Irvine reminds us about the serious health conditions that can result from our extreme heat in Southern California, such as: Hyperthermia, Ear Infections, Heat Rash and Dehydration. While these conditions can be serious, they can also be avoided and/or managed. For example, heat exhaustion, heat stroke and heat cramps are all forms of hypothermia. This is one of the most common conditions we see in the summer among children, adults and seniors. Staying hydrated is the most common recommendation for avoiding hypothermia, but we also need to think about the clothes we are wearing. Tight clothing, for example, doesn't allow your body to cool properly. Dark colored clothing can attract heat. Medication can also affect the body's ability to stay hydrated and dissipate heat, sugary drinks can cause you to lose more body fluid. These are all things we need to keep in mind but may not think about.

During her courageous fight, Jessie decided to focus on helping other kids fighting cancer that couldn't leave the hospital. This desire led to the creation of her fun-filled JoyJars and Never Ever Give Up (aka: NEGU) message.
