SMOKERS & CIGARETTES: The sale of cigarettes and other tobacco products at drug stores would be illegal in San Francisco if an ordinance introduced this week by Mayor Gavin Newsom wins approval. The proposed law is designed to curb tobacco sales at stores where pharmacists work, but would not apply to big box businesses such as Costco or to grocery stores. The ordinance is just one of a series of measures supported by the mayor intended to promote healthy living among San Francisco residents, said Newsom spokeswoman Giselle Barry. "The spirit of this is that pharmacies are places people go to get better," she said. "They shouldn't be selling products that cause cancer." The legislation, introduced, would take effect on Oct. 1 if the Board of Supervisors approves it. The Department of Public Health, which already regulates tobacco sales in San Francisco, would enforce the law. Violators would face fines of $100 to $1,000.

Lawyers for these families maintain that the boys were developing normally until they were exposed to vaccines containing thimerosal, preservative containing mercury. After receiving these vaccinations, the attorneys say, the boys began to show symptoms of autism - a developmental disability characterized by difficulty in communicating and interacting with others.

PROGRAM EVENING NEWS

Budget Crisis: Health and welfare programs were among the hardest hit. The governor has proposed cuts in health care for the poor, recent immigrants and disabled residents. But his budget is centered on borrowing money against future revenue from the state lottery, which voters approved in 1984 to help fund education. While other states have enacted or considered leasing, selling or creating a quasi-public entity to operate their lotteries, this would be the first time that a state would sell bonds against future lottery revenue. Schwarzenegger wants the state to sell up to $15 billion in bonds over three years. The new debt would be repaid with interest using profits generated by the state lottery, said Mike Genest, director of Department of Finance. In addition, lottery money spent on public education in the state would be capped at the current level of $1.2 billion, even if lottery revenue increases.

STRESS AND BABIES

WHEN 5/18/08

Stress Babies: If an expectant mother is exposed to high levels of stress, her baby may be more likely to develop asthma or allergies later in life, new research suggests. Babies born to mothers experiencing high levels of stress had more IgE in their blood at birth than did babies born to less-stressed moms. IgE is an antibody involved in allergic and asthmatic reactions. "Moms who had elevated levels of stress had children who seemed to be more reactive to allergens, even when exposed to low levels of allergens," said study co-author Dr. Rosalind Wright, an assistant professor of medicine at Brigham and Women's Hospital and Harvard Medical School in Boston.
