Studies suggest that many Hispanics may have more risk factors for developing than other groups, and a significant number appear to be getting Alzheimer's earlier. And surveys indicate that Latinos, less likely to see doctors because of financial and language barriers, more often mistake dementia symptoms for normal aging, delaying diagnosis. It is not that Hispanics are more genetically predisposed to Alzheimer's, say experts, who say the diversity of ethnicities that make up Hispanics or Latinos make a genetic explanation unlikely.

PROGRAM DESPIERTA AMERICA

Americans receiving Social Security are about to see the biggest increase in their benefits in a quarter century. The new cost-of-living increase will be announced later today by the Social Security Administration. It is expected to be above 5.5 percent. That makes it the largest increase since a 7.4 percent jump in 1982. A 5.5 percent increase means about $60 more a month for the average retiree. Even with the gain, the fatter Social Security check still may seem puny to millions of retirees battered this year by huge increases in energy and food costs. They've also watched their retirement savings being assaulted by the biggest upheavals on Wall Street in seven decades. In one break for most retirees, the cost-of-living increase will not be eaten up by higher monthly premiums for Medicare which will stay the same.

"The one thing I can say with certainty is that we are going to need to see a stimulus package passed either before or after inauguration," he added.
