Episode Title: Culture of Masculinity
Length: 30 minutes
Airdate: 8/3/2019 5:30:00 PM

New psychological guidelines look at how males are socialized to be masculine, and the negative impact that can have. The American Psychological Association in 2018 published its first-ever guidelines for psychological practice related specifically to boys and men. The guidelines look at how the socialization of men and unhealthy concepts of masculinity may be contributing to higher rates of suicide, depression, health disorders and violence in male populations. And while the report set off a controversy in the U.S., there are already ongoing efforts to disrupt this embedded culture of masculinity in some unexpected places, from the football field to the middle of a mosh pit. NewsHour Weekend's Christopher Booker reports.

Series Title: Learning to Drive
Length: 30 minutes
Airdate: 8/5/2019 12:30:00 AM, 9/2/2019 12:00:00 AM

Learning to Drive is a short film inspired by the true story of a feisty young man with Down syndrome determined to convince his scatterbrained brother to teach him how to drive! This is an award-winning, entertaining film that features two particularly unique facets. First, the story is told entirely from the point of view of the lead character Michael, who has Down syndrome as portrayed by award winning actor and self-advocate Connor Long, who also has Down syndrome. Secondly, although it is a drama, it is told in a fun and lighthearted way. Because the film is not 'preachy', it's messages of empowerment and about shaping new perspectives on people with intellectual disabilities and their life goals is notably more effective.

Series Title: Appalachians
Length: 60 minutes
Airdate: 9/15/2019 3:00:00 PM

The story of Appalachia is about the struggle over land. In the 1830's the growing nation set its sights on land that was still owned by the Indians. President Andrew Jackson, himself a son of Appalachia, ordered the removal of the Cherokee from their mountain homes and marched them to settle in what is now Oklahoma. Slavery and other social and economic differences were widening the gap between the American north and south. There were fewer slaves in the hilly Appalachian region than in plantations farther south, but the mountains would become a fierce Civil War battleground. Members of the same family fought for the Union and for the Confederacy. It was a time of violence and chaos, leaving scars on mountain life for years to come. After the Civil War, industrialization came to Appalachia. Railroads were built, forests were cut, and outside owners bought up the land. During the boom, a conflict between two timbering families, the Hatfields and the McCoys, was called a 'blood feud' and turned into legend. Outsiders created the stereotype of a stupid, violent hillbilly, an image that was seriously damaging to the people of Appalachia. But timbering and coal mining brought jobs to the region. Through the early part of the 20th century, men left their farms for a regular wage, but they found their lives controlled by the coal companies. The United Mine Workers tried to organize, but it was resisted by the owners, often with violence. Resentments grew, and exploded in a series of devastating strikes known as the "great coal wars". Through their struggles, the people of Appalachia held on to their love of land and family. Music continued to have great meaning for them, and they often adapted old, traditional ballads into songs that told the story of their lives in America.

Episode Title: Iraq's Crop Fires
Length: 30 minutes
Airdate: 7/28/2019 5:30:00 PM

The country is nearing a record-breaking harvest, but mysterious fires are threatening some of that production. Iraq is on track to reach a record production of wheat this year, but the success has been dampened by widespread fires that have destroyed thousands of acres of farmland in northern Iraq. The locations of the fires have raised suspicions, with most occurring in minority Sunni and Yazidi Arab farming communities in a region once terrorized by the Islamic State, and where disputes over land provide plenty of tinder to spark conflict. But the government contends that most of the fires were started by natural causes or by accident. NewsHour Weekend Special Correspondent Simona Foltyn reports.

Series Title: Appalachians

Length: 60 minutes
Airdate: 9/15/2019 4:00:00 PM,

At the turn of the 20th century, the phonograph and the radio exposed the mountain people to new influences, and took mountain music across America. Stars like Jimmie Rodgers and the Carter Family began making records. And it was a radio program at WSM in Nashville, Tennessee, that gave birth to the Grand Ole Opry. But times were hard, and Appalachia fell into an economic depression even before the rest of the country. President Roosevelt's New Deal was a great boon to the region. The TVA brought electricity into the mountain hollers; the WPA and the CCC offered jobs and built infrastructure. Roosevelt was a hero in Appalachia, and many wondered how they would have survived without the New Deal. World War II took many young people from the mountains. After the war, underground mines were mechanized, and miners were laid off. Throughout the 1950's, people flocked to the big cities in search of work. For those who tried to stay home, it became harder to hold on to their land. State and federal governments claimed property for dams; family farmsteads were flooded, and more people moved away. It was one of the largest internal migrations in American history, and left many Appalachian people displaced in an urban world. The War on Poverty in the 1960's again sent federal aid into Appalachia. But television and magazines showed painful images of hunger and poverty, reinforcing the stereotype of the poor hillbilly. The nation still has a need for coal, and methods have been found to produce it more cheaply and efficiently. In the 1950's, it was strip-mining, and for the past thirty years it has been a process that opponents call "mountain-top removal."

We uncover the story of our relationship with the skies from our earliest ancestors, through to the birth of the science of astronomy. Our story begins with one of the earliest known creation myths the Babylonian Enuma Elish. With spectacular CGI animation, we see the clash of the gods Marduk and Tiamat that the Babylonians believed gave birth to the earth and the sky. In this episode we visit the caves of El Castillo in Northern Spain. Deep inside the caves we see some of the earliest cave paintings in the world. Astronomer Phil Plait shows us how the skies could be used to navigate and tell the time, either by observing the phases of the moon, or by tracking the movements of the sun across the horizon. We look at Stonehenge and the Great Pyramid of Giza and see that, as our earliest civilisations developed, we built monuments that enabled us to observe the skies and worship them. We visit Ancient Greece, where the great storytellers Hesiod and Homer were populating the world with gods and monsters. That is until the first philosophers started to look at the world not in terms of individual events that showed the actions of living gods in the sky, but as phenomena that were all part of the patterns of the natural world. As philosophy and early science start to reshape the world from mythological to rational, we are on the cusp of a revolution that gave birth to modern science.
