Detailed Description: “Highway/Sensors”: Bridges and overpasses are often the first thing to freeze over, but MoDOT uses technology to try to stay ahead of the weather. Many of the bridges and overpasses we go over have built in sensors that check continuously for temperature and what kind of precipitation is on the bridge. The sensors can even alert MoDOT to the consistency of the salt solution on the bridge and determine whether or not it's getting too diluted. Most importantly, MoDOT says by using these cameras and sensors at the transportation management center. They're getting the information in real time and then updating maps as quickly as possible.
