Propane Costs	News	6/12/2014	6, 7, 8AM Noon & 5PM	1 minute	One Northwoods propane dealer thinks we're not done with winter propane nightmares. Last winter, supply and demand meant propane prices skyrocketed to nearly $6 per gallon. Josh Schmoll tried to supply a seemingly endless number of desperate customers last year. He's in charge of Draeger Propane in Rhineland. Schmoll is expecting similar problems next winter. "I've been told there will be price volatility next winter, and that there will be supply challenges next winter. Don't count on having propane available when we need it," Schmoll says. A pipeline sending propane from Canada to the Midwest just closed. The U.S. continues to export large amounts of propane, as well. Those factors will likely strain Wisconsin's propane supply. Schmoll wants people to think about propane for next winter now, not when it starts getting cold. "I want people to ask a question to themselves. (Was) the company they were with last winter, did they treat them fair? If they did, stick with them. If you had a winter contract, was it fulfilled? Did you get gas when you needed it? If you answer no to any one of those questions, you'd better start looking for another supplier," Schmoll says. Like many other propane dealers, Draeger offers customers the chance to pre-buy their winter propane for a locked-in cost. The State of Wisconsin is also offering energy assistance money this summer for those who qualify.
Bike Safety	News	6/12/2014	6, 7, 8AM Noon & 5PM	1 minute	Some of our best summer memories probably come from riding bikes as kids. But each year, adults and kids can get hurt or even killed while riding their bikes. The Rhineland Police Department and local businesses want to prevent just that. This week they kicked off the second year of "Safety Is Sweet." Rhineland Police will reward children wearing helmets. Those rewards are free treat certificates to ice cream shops, a candy store, and a movie theater. In 2012, 726 bicyclists died and 49 thousand were injured in the U.S.

Global Art Display	News	6/13/2014	6,7,8AM Noon & 5PM	1 minute	More than 30 artists from around the world will be showcasing their work in the new ArtStart exhibit in Rhinelander. The FolkStory exhibit includes different art-making skills like papier-mache, collages and quilt, that also means decorative and folk-art. "It's just a wide range and survey of folk-art. We call it folk-story because we wanted that wasn't just technically good, but it had a little more to it; it had a story to it," said Laura Ehmann, an ArtStart executive team member. "You will be reading a lot about these pieces that you see." ArtStart wants to expand the idea of what art is. Volunteers will do that by expanding what the organization will offer patrons throughout the summer. Galleries and exhibits will now feature summer concerts, a Latin film series and a weekly art program for kids. "We have a wonderful, vibrant artist area community. But our mission is to be the icing on that cake, to bring art in that you normally would not see in this area," said Ehmann. "That benefits everybody." One of the featured pieces in the gallery is a handmade quilt, showcasing the results of intense racial period in our country. There are hundreds of names of African Americans who were lynched in the United States starting in the 1850s. "It's called 'Strange Fruit' after the Billie Holiday song, which is a very evocative, moving song about the tragedy of lynching. It's very moving.[The artist] said she had to stop about halfway through, because it was too emotionally overwhelming." There is plenty of artwork to enjoy at the exhibit, which runs until August 30th. Contact ArtStart for more information on gallery times and programs.
