If stocks are the race cars of investments (fun, fast, and pretty risky), then bonds are the barges (boring, slow, and pretty secure). Yet bonds, despite their promise of steady income streams, aren't something you should buy blindly. You need to understand how bonds work -- particularly in this volatile market -- before you add them to your portfolio. This special explains bond basics and examines how to build a bond portfolio.

Clergy Stress: Surveys have repeatedly found that job satisfaction among clergy is very high, but that the rates of depression, obesity and other health problems are also high, well above those of the general population. Deborah Potter reports on the stresses in the life of a pastor, and on one of the fifty programs now being implemented in the U.S. to address issues of clergy health. Profile: Arthur Kleinman: The challenge of enough family member caregivers--the indispensable people, most of them unpaid women, who give everyday care to the old, disabled and sick. Their numbers are going down while the demand for them is going up, fast, as more and more people live longer. Host Bob Abernethy profiles Harvard professor and psychiatrist Arthur Kleinman, who became his wife's caregiver for seven years. Sukkahs: Dani Passow, consultant to an international design competition called Sukkah City, gives us a tour of the results of the competition on display in New York City's Union Square Park and explains the biblical laws for the building of the temporary dwellings inhabited by Jews during the week-long celebration of Succoth.

We have a special election edition of Need to Know this week. Our Watch List investigation focuses on efforts by both parties to control the future balance of power by controlling the way congressional district lines are redrawn. We're also looking at the new and not exactly improved voting machines that are meant to make voting easier and more honest, along with some disquieting possibilities for what can be done with the software for these machines. And our host Alison Stewart sits down with Salon's Rebecca Traister and Princeton University associate professor Melissa Harris-Perry, two women who have a lot to say about how women have changed the political playing field this year. Also this week, more advice from our new contributor Peter Sagal (host of "Wait, Wait...Don't Tell Me!").

Legalizing Marijuana - On November 2, Californians will vote on Proposition 19, which would legalize marijuana in the state. While advocates say decriminalization will save tax payers money and eliminate unnecessary arrests, some church leaders worry that legalizing pot will lead to more drug abuse, especially in African-American communities. Lucky Severson reports on a debate that's dividing politicians, local leaders, and the religious community. Pilgrimage of Remembrance and Healing -- Every month Chaplain Randall Haycock of Walter Reed Army Medical Center leads small groups of veterans, family members, and others on a pilgrimage to Washington's National Cathedral to remember their war dead and face their grief. Religion & Ethics NewsWeekly accompanied one of the groups on a recent pilgrimage.

Long before the Deepwater Horizon explosion in the Gulf, BP was widely viewed as a company that valued deal-making and savvy marketing over safety, a "serial environmental criminal" that left behind a long trail of problems – deadly accidents, disastrous spills, countless safety violations – which many now believe should have triggered action by federal regulators. Could the spill have been prevented? Through interviews with current and former employees and executives, government regulators and safety experts, FRONTLINE correspondent Martin Smith joins with the investigative non-profit ProPublica to examine the trail that led to the disaster in the Gulf. From BP's vast oil fields in Alaska to its refineries in Texas and its trading rooms in New York and London, the film raises new questions about whether BP's corporate culture will finally be forced to change.

The Republican Party made significant gains with Catholic voters as well as white Protestants. Did the Democrats give up on religious outreach? Arizona gives tax credits to people who donate money to school tuition organizations that provide student scholarships. A group of taxpayers claims most of the money goes to religious education. Benyamin Cohen has written a book about his year-long exploration of Christianity, and he uses what he learned to reflect on the meaning of his own Jewish faith.

Eid al-Adha: "It's a religious obligation for us to give to other people," says Dawud Walid. Near the completion of the hajj, meat is slaughtered according to Islamic requirements and shared with family, friends, and the poor. Zen Hospital Chaplains: The New York Zen Center for Contemplative Care, directed by two Buddhist monks, is training chaplains, caregivers, and health care professionals to listen to patients and lighten the burden of their suffering and pain. Washington Jesuit Academy: "We do this not to create Catholics, but because we are Catholic. It's the social justice teachings of the church that drive us," says WJA director of counseling services Ann Clark. The tuition-free middle school explicitly addresses the spiritual and moral development of its students.

This week, we present a special international edition of Need to Know. One week after Burma's contested elections, we focus on another developing issue in the pariah state – the military junta's nuclear ambitions. Then we turn our attention to the Indian Ocean to feature the story of a French family that was abducted by Somali pirates. Alison Stewart discusses the psychological ramifications of the conflicts in the Middle East with Israeli author David Grossman. And we report on efforts to build the infrastructure for a future Palestinian state. Peter Sagal also returns this week to give advice to members of Congress who have been recently voted out of office.

Host David Brancaccio visits communities across America that are using innovative approaches to create jobs and build prosperity. After the economic meltdown of 2008, the nation stands in urgent need of economic growth that's not based on risky financial bets placed by Wall Street. Brancaccio travels from Maine to Washington State, from Texas to Ohio in search of new solutions. He talks to working Americans who are re-engineering the future, built on American values of commonwealth, shared prosperity, fairness, wellness, sustainability and creativity. Brancaccio's travels for the documentary are done sustainably, ranging from trains and buses to electric cars and even bicycle. Brancaccio talks to Nobel Prize winner Joseph Stiglitz and economists David Korten and Jane D'Arista to explore the new pathways being charted by economic reformers. Can these experiments be nurtured and grown to provide new opportunities for our children and grandchildren?

Beverly May and Terry Ratliff grew up on opposite sides of a mountain ridge in eastern Kentucky, where coal is king. When a mountaintop removal coal mine encroaches on their community, the two find themselves on opposite sides of a debate that divides their community and the world -- who controls, consumes, and benefits from the planet's dwindling supply of natural resources? In a small town in dire economic straits and high unemployment, the coal company's offer to buy land and provide jobs can be hard to resist. What can a community do when it must choose between its present and its future?

Budget Watchdogs Warn of Worsening Deficit, Explore Strategies to Cut:
Following on the heels of the bipartisan deficit commission chairman's recommendation of drastic cuts, former Republican Sen. Pete Domenici and former White House Budget Director Alice Rivlin presented a new take on how to reduce the deficit and warned of a "death spiral" if the debt was not corrected with austerity measures.

Host David Brancaccio visits communities across America that are using innovative approaches to create jobs and build prosperity. After the economic meltdown of 2008, the nation stands in urgent need of economic growth that's not based on risky financial bets placed by Wall Street. Brancaccio travels from Maine to Washington State, from Texas to Ohio in search of new solutions. He talks to working Americans who are re-engineering the future, built on American values of commonwealth, shared prosperity, fairness, wellness, sustainability and creativity. Brancaccio's travels for the documentary are done sustainably, ranging from trains and buses to electric cars and even bicycle. Brancaccio talks to Nobel Prize winner Joseph Stiglitz and economists David Korten and Jane D'Arista to explore the new pathways being charted by economic reformers. Can these experiments be nurtured and grown to provide new opportunities for our children and grandchildren?

This week on Need to Know, we continue last week's story on Somali pirates. After being held captive for more than a year, a British couple was released by the pirates earlier this week. We discuss their release and then explore the origins of and motivations behind Somali piracy. Correspondent Rick Karr also explores some of the government's contradictory messages when it comes to promoting nutrition while simultaneously encouraging the public to eat cheese. Then, we take a look at the U.S. military's efforts to collect biometric data from citizens in Afghanistan for future intelligence. Georgetown University professor Christine Fair sits down with Jon Meacham to discuss the U.S.'s plans for withdrawal from Afghanistan, as well as our future relationship with Pakistan, and Alison Stewart speaks with religious scholar Reza Aslan about his new book on the history of the Middle East as depicted in literature. Editorial cartoonist Steve Brodner also returns with an illustrated review of Sarah Palin's new reality TV show.

20 Kilometers a Year: A dramatic video report on U.S. soldiers in the front lines of battle in Afghanistan from Sean Smith, a reporter with the UK's Guardian newspaper. (Originally aired September 17, 2010). Uniform Justice: "Veterans' courts" are being set up around the country to help veterans suffering from untreated Post Traumatic Stress Disorder (PTSD) and Traumatic Brain Injury (TBI) who are landing in the criminal justice system. But are these courts giving special treatment to veterans? Correspondent Maria Hinojosa reports. (Originally aired July 9, 2010). Six-Word Memoirs: In cooperation with SMITH magazine, Need to Know features the stories of veterans coming home from Afghanistan and Iraq, who told their stories in just six words. (Originally aired November 5, 2010). Evan Thomas: Alison Stewart speaks with Newsweek's editor-at-large, Evan Thomas, on his book "The War Lovers," which draws parallels between the Spanish-American War and the Second Gulf War. (Originally aired July 23, 2010). Outside the Wire: Need to Know profiles two young enlisted women in the U.S. Air Force who serve a crucial, and dangerous, role in the current wars: disarming roadside bombs which have become the number one killer of American troops. Amber Hanlon and Marie Martinson, two among approximately 140 military women doing the same job performed by the soldiers in "The Hurt Locker," tell what it's like to be a woman on the front lines. (Originally aired July 9, 2010). Just Ask Peter Sagal: In this special Thanksgiving edition of Just Ask, Peter Sagal shares some tips on how to survive a holiday family gathering.

*Iraq's Disappearing Christians: Iraq's Christian community is one of the world's oldest, but since the American invasion in 2003 perhaps a third of its one million members have fled the country because of persecution. Many have taken jobs with the U.S. Army. Islamic extremists called them traitors, demanding they convert to Islam. Kate Seelye reports on the efforts to keep the remaining Christians where they are, but it's predicted that, because of the continuing violence, most of them would migrate to the United States if they could. (Originally broadcast July 23, 2010, show #1347). *Profile: Abraham Verghese: Abraham Verghese is a professor at Stanford Medical School, but he is acclaimed for his two best-selling memoirs and a new work of fiction. His novel explores the practice of medicine as more than science, but as a calling to ministry. Correspondent Fred de Sam Lazarosat down with Verghese to discuss the confluence of faith and medicine and the power of the patient-physician bond. (Originally broadcast July 16, 2010, show #1346) *A Poet on the Psalms: After a dark time in her life, poet and writer Pamela Greenberg returned to religion as an adult, and has published a new translation of the Book of Psalms for modern times. Religion & Ethics

NewsWeekly sat down with Greenberg who talks about how the Book of Psalms addresses the entire spectrum of human emotions. (Originally broadcast July 2, 2010, show #1344)

This week on Need to Know, we continue last week's story on Somali pirates. After being held captive for more than a year, a British couple was released by the pirates earlier this week. We discuss their release and then explore the origins of and motivations behind Somali piracy. Correspondent Rick Karr also explores some of the government's contradictory messages when it comes to promoting nutrition while simultaneously encouraging the public to eat cheese. Then, we take a look at the U.S. military's efforts to collect biometric data from citizens in Afghanistan for future intelligence. Georgetown University professor Christine Fair sits down with Jon Meacham to discuss the U.S.'s plans for withdrawal from Afghanistan, as well as our future relationship with Pakistan, and Alison Stewart speaks with religious scholar Reza Aslan about his new book on the history of the Middle East as depicted in literature. Editorial cartoonist Steve Brodner also returns with an illustrated review of Sarah Palin's new reality TV show.

This year, hundreds of thousands of prisoners with serious mental illnesses will be released into communities across America, the largest exodus in the nation's history. Typically, mentally ill offenders leave prison with a bus ticket, $75 and two weeks worth of medication. Within eighteen months, nearly two-thirds are re-arrested. In this follow up to the groundbreaking film "The New Asylums," FRONTLINE examines what happens to the mentally ill when they leave prison and why they return at such alarming rates. The intimate stories of the released-along with interviews with parole officers, social workers, and psychiatrists provide a rare look at the lives of the mentally ill as they struggle to stay out of prison and reintegrate into society.

One year after the deadliest domestic airline accident in seven years, FRONTLINE investigates the crash of Continental 3407 in Buffalo, NY, and discovers a dramatically changed airline industry, where regional carriers now account for half of the nation's daily departures. The rise of the regionals and arrival of low-cost carriers have been a huge boon to consumers, and the industry insists that the skies remain safe. But many insiders are worried that now, thirty years after airline deregulation, the aviation system is being stretched beyond its capacity to deliver service that is both cheap and safe.
