DTV answers is to educate the public for the switch to digital television in 2009. The first time television switched from black and white, to color was in 1953 and the technical aspect of television has changed. The need to change was addressed by the government. The analog system needs to be used for first response, cell-phone technology, and other technological systems. The government needs the frequencies of television and radio back to be used for the reasons mentioned above. HDTV and DTV are different, DTV is digital television HDTV is high definition television, digital is falling into resolution 800, which means clarity analog has 525 resolution of clarity, HDTV has 1,800 resolution lines, HDTV and digital televisions have a rectangular screen as opposed to the square televisions. For more information, go to www.dtvanswers.com or www.dtv.gov. To learn more about switching to digital television.

Segment 2 (6:10-16:11)

February 17, 2009, the transition will come in effect. The digital transition doesn't impact everyone, DirecTV and Comcast users will not notice the transition. People who have the rabbit ears television need to check the manuals of their television or purchase the digital box at Wal-Mart, Best-buy or Circuit City. The box costs anywhere from 50-60 dollars.
