Crime	01/10/18	PM Newscast	4 min	Use of Force	All this week on Morning Edition, we've been telling the stories of questionable police shootings in the Cook County suburbs. And the complete lack of accountability for suburban officers. It's part of a new investigative project by WBEZ and the Better Government Association. We found that police in suburban Cook County have to make life-or-death decisions under sometimes lax and unenforced use-of-force policies.

Crime	01/11/18	AM Newscast	6:00	Taking Cover: Major Coleman	In suburban Cook County, just a handful of troubled departments are responsible for almost half of all police shootings. Suburban officials say there are a lot of reasons for that - including that many of those towns have higher crime rates than other suburbs. And that a lack of funding means they are often understaffed, and can't afford to pay for ongoing training for officers. That same lack of resources can also force departments to hire and retain problem officers who can't cut it at better resourced departments.
