

COMMUNITY NEEDS AND ISSUES

Based upon WPBF's involvement in its community and input from community leaders and various organizations, WPBF has determined that the following issues are the concerns of the community:

➤ Politics

All political issues, races and governmental concerns on local, state wide and national levels.

➤ Crime / Court

Street crimes, gangs, and the use/sale of illegal drugs are issues of serious concern. Issues and actions that take place every day in our courts affect the daily lives of our viewers.

➤ Community

Events, concerns and the day to day issues that affect the local community.

➤ Health/ Safety

Issues facing the health of viewers in our area. Medical breakthroughs. All issues dealing with safety are important to the viewing audience.

➤ Terror/War

All matters related to terrorism home and abroad. War is a very important issue that faces everyone everyday

➤ Economy

How the overall economy of the nation, state, county, and city affects individuals' ability to manage on their current incomes is an overwhelming concern. How local/state and national leaders will lead on the economic front is also a concern.

➤ Sports

News and information relating to the sports world local, national and international.

➤ Environment/Weather

Concerns and issues that involve the environment, weather and what is being done to address these issues.

➤ Education / School

The primary and secondary school education of area children, the high cost of attending college, children's safety in schools, and quality of education offered are issues of public concern.

Crime / Court	Matter of Fact	N	4/25	1000-1030	30	This week on "Matter of Fact with Soledad O'Brien," with the end of the Derek Chauvin trial, and the delivery of unanimous guilty verdicts, a traumatized nation stops to consider the collective damage of racism and police violence. This is not an end to the reckoning. In fact, since the trial began, at least 64 other people have lost their lives at the hands of police. More than half of those killed are Black or Latino. How do we process the trauma inflicted by generations of racial injustice and violence? Soledad O'Brien talks with Dr. Steven Kniffley, a clinic psychologist and faculty member at Spaulding University in Louisville, Kentucky about generational trauma, the biological and relational indicators of trauma, and how research on Holocaust survivors provided the link to the damage carried forward since slavery. We draw on Dr. Kniffley's expertise as the leader of one of the few race-based trauma treatment centers in the country. Plus, the Oscars are making history with the nomination of "Judas and the Black Messiah" for Best Picture. 					writers, is also up for Best Original Screenplay. The movie tells the story of Black Panther leader, Fred Hampton, and the FBI informant, William O’Neal, who infiltrated the movement. Director Shaka King sits down with Soledad for an interview about how the film “corrects” history, and why story telling is so crucial for America right now. It’s part of an interview we featured in the Matter of Fact Listening Tour – To Be an American, Identity, Race, and Justice, still streaming at matteroffact.tv. Then, we introduce you to Andrea James. In 2009, James, a Roxbury, Massachusetts criminal defense lawyer, was sentenced to serve a 24-month federal prison sentence for wire fraud. It shook her, especially given that her family had a long history of civil rights advocacy. Andrea says she knew she’d made a mistake, but was afraid to admit it, which made matters worse, and landed her on a prison bunk. Add to her distress, leaving four children behind. She was stunned by what she encountered upon entering the federal prison system as an incarcerated person. Now, as the founder and Executive Director of Families for Justice as Healing she’s pleading with President Biden to grant clemency to 100 women in his first 100 days in office. Her interview with Soledad focuses on the effects of incarceration of women on children and communities, and why she says, doing time isn’t serving anyone. In our “We’re Paying Attention” segment, we detail the case on the Supreme Court docket on Monday, April 26th. 						Prosperity Foundation v. Rodriquez, could make it easier to hide the names of people donating large sums of money to political campaigns through non-profit corporations. Why does it matter? Ten years ago, the court issued a ruling known as Citizens United. It said corporations could spend unlimited money on behalf of candidates and causes, but the names of donors remained public information. Your personal donations are subject to the same disclosure rules – any donation over $200 requires reporting of name, address, occupation, and place of employment. Depending on how the court rules, corporations could avoid those rules. And finally, we celebrate Earth Day and the common vacuum cleaner! The Biden Administration marked Earth Day by announcing new goals to reduce greenhouse gas emissions. To do that, we need a solution for carbon removal – which would, in turn, slow down climate change. A European company may have the answer, inspired by a household item: the vacuum. Climeworks has created a giant vacuum that collects four thousand tons of carbon dioxide in a year. We’ll show you their invention and explain why they think it will really clear things up. Please join us for “Matter of Fact with Soledad O’Brien.”

This is not an end to the reckoning. In fact, since the trial began, at least 64 other people have lost their lives at the hands of police. More than half of those killed are Black or Latino. How do we process the trauma inflicted by generations of racial injustice and violence? Soledad O'Brien talks with Dr. Steven Kniffley, a clinic psychologist and faculty member at Spaulding University in Louisville, Kentucky about generational trauma, the biological and relational indicators of trauma, and how research on Holocaust survivors provided the link to the damage carried forward since slavery. We draw on Dr. Kniffley's expertise as the leader of one of the few race-based trauma treatment centers in the country. Plus, the Oscars are making history

Ten years ago, the court issued a ruling known as Citizens United. It said corporations could spend unlimited money on behalf of candidates and causes, but the names of donors remained public information. Your personal donations are subject to the same disclosure rules – any donation over $200 requires reporting of name, address, occupation, and place of employment. Build UP Birmingham serves students who live in the Ensley neighborhood, a zip code defined by "struggle." The school's founder, Mark Martin, got the idea for the school while getting his doctorate at Harvard. An Alabama native, Martin returned to his home state and has taken on this experiment in reforming education. Come along as we find out how it works, and what students, parents, and teachers say about making schooling pay off for the graduates. Then, May is Asian American and Pacific Islander Heritage Month. Unfortunately, what should be a celebration of diversity continues to be marred by violence. The spike in Anti-Asian hate crimes puts a spotlight on the issue of "belonging" and "Americanness." Our nation's history is marked by moments when a citizen's "belonging" is challenged. Such is the story of Fred Korematsu, a Californian, whose "allegiance" was questioned during World War II. At 23 years of age, he defied a Presidential Order, refusing to go to a Japanese internment camp. His punishment was jail and a decades long battle to recover his civil rights. In this segment, originally part of the "Matter of Fact LISTENING TOUR: To Be an American - Identity, Race and Justice," we ask his daughter, Karen Korematsu, to share his story and lessons about belonging in America. Plus, if demographics control destiny, America is in the middle of a major political and cultural shift. The 1960s, the decade of protest movements, the sexual revolution, and rock 'n roll, marked a similar generational shift. The conflicts that grew out of the shift, referred to as the generation gap, became the plotlines for movies and TV. Soledad talks with journalist, author and CNN political analyst Ron Brownstein about the generation gap that changed the trajectory of American politics and culture. Hear their discussion of 1974 – the year Brownstein says transformed movies, music, television, and politics. It's the subject of his most recent book, "Rock Me on The Water." Then, could vaccine hesitancy prolong the pandemic? And, what can be done about it? President Biden set a goal of fully vaccinating 160 million adults by July 4th. Yet, vaccination rates are falling. What will it take to turn the situation around? We consider the lesson from the polio vaccine rollout of 1955. Failures in that effort resulted in hundreds of cases of paralysis and ten deaths. Still, a strong belief in science, increased quality control efforts, and a massive public information campaign kept vaccinations on track. We detail possible next steps to get America vaccinated by Independence Day. Finally, it's Mother's Day weekend—thanks, in large part, to the efforts of one West Virginia daughter who wanted a holiday to honor her mother's work during the Civil War and after. Community	Matter of Fact	N	5/23	1000-1030	30	This week on Matter of Fact with Soledad O'Brien, we uncover the hidden history of the Tulsa Race Massacre. The 1921 attack on Greenwood, an affluent African American community in Tulsa, was one of the most significant and appalling events in U.S. history. Though many Americans know little about it because of a vast, coordinated effort to cover up the events. Greenwood was a thriving business district often referred to as “Black Wall Street.” Beginning on May 30th and ending on June 1st of 1921, a series of events nearly destroyed the entire area. Bombs were dropped from planes. The dead were gathered and thrown in the Arkansas River, and in mass graves. We travel to Tulsa to explore the efforts to reclaim the hidden history, bring to light the stories of the victims, and understand the crusade for reparations. Soledad O’Brien reports. Plus, the post-World War I era was a hotbed of Ku Klux Klan activity across the country. Community	Matter of Fact	N	5/30	1000-1030	30	This week on MATTER OF FACT with Soledad O'Brien, we explore a seismic shift in the way families are living in the pandemic era. Two generations ago, forming your own family and buying your own home marked the passage to adulthood. Now, millennials, wounded by the pandemic and the economic downturn, are living the experiences most similar to their Depression-era counterparts. A Pew Research Center study finds a majority of young adults, ages 18-29, now live with parents and grandparents—more than during the Great Depression. We hear the very personal story of Andie Karanas, a recent college graduate and writer, who moved back to her parents' home in New Jersey,

					joining two siblings, and her grandparents. We get a look at what life is like when three adult generations are sharing a home. Plus, Soledad talks with Jeffrey Passel, a senior demographer at Pew Research Center, about the trends he's seen over the past 50 years, and the upside of having multiple generations living under one roof. Then, it's been a year since George Floyd was killed by police in Minneapolis. His death sparked a national reckoning over racial injustice. Segregation is a major source of racial inequality, and that intentional and historic separation is present, even in our churches. In fact, 80 percent of most congregations represent a single race. Soledad shares a story she found in North Carolina as part of the MATTER OF FACT Listening Tour- To Be an American: Identity, Race and Justice. On a visit to Salisbury, North Carolina, we meet Reverend Aldan Allen, who is the first Black pastor in the 200-year history of his church. With about 300 members, Reverend Allen's congregation is entirely white. His wife, Sonya MacAuley-Allen, is also a pastor. And, her congregation is mostly Black. Our story, about their efforts to foster racial reconciliation is called, "Revelations." Plus, it's Memorial Day Weekend, and families will gather for beach days, cookouts, park visits, and parades. Celebrations made possible by the decline in COVID-19 cases and more people getting their vaccines. The Centers for Disease Control says half of adult residents in 25 states and the District of Columbia have been vaccinated. Now, children over 12

					are eligible for the shots. But parents are skeptical. Soledad talks with Brian Castrucci, the President and CEO of the de Beaumont Foundation, and a leading voice on public health issues, about overcoming vaccine hesitancy—especially when it comes to our kids. And, over the years, we've reported on hunger in America. But there's actually a problem of too much food. Families, restaurants, and grocery stores throw out food, much of it still edible. That food waste decomposes in landfills and creates nearly ten percent of all global greenhouse gas emissions. Those gases heat up the environment and damage our climate. Well, there an app that hopes to reduce food waste and address hunger. We'll give you the download on this worldwide solution. Finally, we take time out to celebrate a special graduation. Just two weeks ago, correspondent Jessica Gomez took us to a first-of-its-kind high school in Birmingham, Alabama. The private school, BuildUP, uses state and federal funds and private donations to pay students to go to class. It gives students after-school jobs to learn the trades, while renovating rundown homes in their neighborhoods. If they graduate and finish two-year apprenticeships or college programs through BuildUP, they earn the chance to own one of those renovated houses. This week, we went to the school's very first graduation, and it was awesome. Crime / Court	Matter of Fact	N	6/6	1000-1030	30	This week on MATTER OF FACT with Soledad O'Brien, the story of an unlikely friendship that started with a call to police. Dana Marsh, a young police officer, responds to the scene of a drug deal, and arrest suspect, Gerrel Jones. That first meeting creates a bond that will withstand a murder trial, prison time, and nearly three decades. Correspondent Jessica Gomez takes us to Birmingham, Alabama for a look at how their remarkable connection has transformed so many lives. Then, American workers burned out and trying to balance the demands of remote work and home life. As

					more businesses rebound, they are being called back to the workplace. But has the year of living and working through a pandemic changed what employees want from their jobs? First we share the story of Shanice Lyons-Linares, a mom who started working remotely while also helping her child with remote school. Her daughter, a special needs student, requiring 24 hour care. Then she finds herself furloughed and struggling to make ends meet. Lyons-Linares describes the challenges of caring for her daughter while needing to find work. Soledad talks with Beth Humberd, an Associate Professor of Management at the University of Massachusetts-Lowell, about what companies can do to convince employees that coming back to the workplace will make life better. Plus, from the Matter of Fact LISTENING TOUR- To Be An American, a look at belonging with Pulitzer prize-winning journalist, Jose Antonio Vargas. Vargas was brought to the United States as a child. He's lived here for nearly 40 years, and still fears deportation. In a passionate personal essay, Vargas describes life as an "undocumented citizen," as he gives voice to those seeking a path to legalized status. Vargas, the author of "Dear America," challenges us to consider what identity really means in America. Then, when was the last time you spent a day without connecting to the internet? Crime / Court	Matter of Fact	N	6/6	1200-1230	30	This week on MATTER OF FACT with Soledad O'Brien, the story of an unlikely friendship that started with a call to police. Dana Marsh, a young police officer, responds to the scene of a drug deal, and arrest suspect, Gerrel Jones. That first meeting creates a bond that will withstand a murder trial, prison time, and nearly three decades. Correspondent Jessica Gomez takes us to Birmingham, Alabama for a look at how their remarkable connection has transformed so many lives. Then, American workers burned out and trying to balance the demands of remote work and home life. As more businesses rebound, they are being called back to the workplace. But has the year of living and working through a pandemic changed what employees want from their jobs? First we share the story of Shanice Lyons-Linares, a mom who started working remotely while also helping her child with remote school. Her daughter, a special needs student, requiring 24 hour care. Then she finds herself furloughed and struggling to make ends meet. Lyons-Linares describes

					the challenges of caring for her daughter while needing to find work. Soledad talks with Beth Humberd, an Associate Professor of Management at the University of Massachusetts-Lowell, about what companies can do to convince employees that coming back to the workplace will make life better. Plus, from the Matter of Fact LISTENING TOUR- To Be An American, a look at belonging with Pulitzer prize-winning journalist, Jose Antonio Vargas. Vargas was brought to the United States as a child. He's lived here for nearly 40 years, and still fears deportation. In a passionate personal essay, Vargas describes life as an "undocumented citizen," as he gives voice to those seeking a path to legalized status. Vargas, the author of "Dear America," challenges us to consider what identity really means in America. Then, when was the last time you spent a day without connecting to the internet? Yet, two billion people around the world have no access. Space-X creator Elon Musk has a plan to change that. His STARLINK project would launch 42 thousand satellites into orbit to provide access to those living in remote and underserved areas. But is it a super-sized space plan or a contributor to more space junk? We look at what he's proposing, its impact, and the cost of providing access around the globe. Finally, a bit of literary trivia. Health/ Safety	Matter of Fact	N	6/20	1000-1030	30	This Week on Matter of Fact with Soledad O'Brien , we check in on a rural Texas hospital that was struggling to survive when it became

					a COVID-19 hot spot. As the pandemic ravaged middle America, it moved swiftly into small towns and rural hospitals faced the very real possibility of closure. Hospitals that serve 60 million Americans – that’s one in five. We share a portion of Correspondent Jessica Gomez’ Telly Award-winning story about Titus Regional Medical Center in the northeast corner of the state. We hear from overwhelmed staff members and see the challenges they face inside this a hospital on life support. Then, Soledad talks with the hospital’s CEO, Terry Scoggin, about how they’ve managed to keep their doors open, their plans for the future, and the economics of serving an “older, sicker, poorer” demographic. Then, when “The Dead Are Arising,” a biography of Malcolm X, won a Pulitzer prize last week, we decided to revisit his legacy. Given his status as one of the 20th Century’s most politically relevant figures, it seemed like the right moment to share an interview with his daughter, Ilyasah Shabazz, about her father’s impact and legacy. Soledad sat down with Shabazz, an author, activist, and educator, as part of the Matter of Fact LISTENING TOUR. They talk about the challenge of embracing multiculturalism, the lessons she learned from her parents, and what it will take to make sure generations of marginalized youth find a place in America. Plus, it happens just once every couple of decades. Health/ Safety	Matter of Fact	N	6/20	1200-1230	30	This Week on Matter of Fact with Soledad O'Brien , we check in on a rural Texas hospital that was struggling to survive when it became a COVID-19 hot spot. As the pandemic ravaged middle America, it moved swiftly into small towns and rural hospitals faced the very real possibility of closure. Hospitals that serve 60 million Americans – that’s one in five. We share a portion of Correspondent Jessica Gomez’ Telly Award-winning story about Titus Regional Medical Center in the northeast corner of the state. We hear from overwhelmed staff members and see the challenges they face inside this a hospital on life support. Then, Soledad talks with the hospital’s CEO, Terry Scoggin, about how they’ve managed to keep their doors open, their plans for the future, and the economics of serving an “older, sicker, poorer” demographic. Then, when “The Dead Are Arising,” a biography of Malcolm X, won a Pulitzer prize last week, we decided to revisit his legacy. Given his status as one of the 20 th
