PBS NewsHour's Yamiche Alcindor Awarded for Excellence in White House Coverage

The White House Correspondents' Association recently named PBS NewsHour White House correspondent Yamiche Alcindor the recipient of the prestigious Aldo Beckman Award for Overall Excellence in White House Coverage. The award recognizes a correspondent who personifies the journalistic excellence and personal qualities of Aldo Beckman, late Washington bureau chief for the Chicago Tribune and former president of the White House Correspondents' Association.

As the White House correspondent for PBS NewsHour and a political contributor for NBC News and MSNBC, Alcindor reports on how politics impacts Americans' everyday lives and social justice issues affecting national discourse. Her coverage of the Trump administration has examined immigration policies, international relations at the G7 Summit, systemic racism in areas like policing and healthcare as well as the Trump administration's response to the COVID-19 pandemic.

On her character, judges agreed, "Alcindor's qualities reflect integrity, impartial analysis, breadth and depth of knowledge of the presidency and a love of the institution. We look forward to watching her work for decades to come."

SDPB's new documentary about the long, winding road to the 1919 ratification of the 19th amendment in South Dakota premieres August 10.

The "simple justice" in the title of SDPB's new women's suffrage documentary is derived from a quotation from John A. Pickler:

"... simple justice demands that woman should have the ballot, and in this opinion, I am warmly seconded by my wife, who desires to vote, as I think all sensible women should."

But the circuitous route that led to women's right to vote in South Dakota is anything but simple and, some may argue, not terribly just. The Picklers, early and active supporters of women's suffrage, are one case in point that feature in SDPB's documentary.

Alice Alt Pickler and her husband John arrived to Dakota Territory from Iowa in 1883, with a bevy of other lowans in search of fertile farmland. Alice was a University of Iowa graduate. John had been a major in the U.S. Army, 3rd Iowa Cavalry, where he was placed in command of a regiment of Black troops. After the war, John got a law degree. In Faulk County, the Picklers thrived financially with Pickler's Law, Land & Loans Office, processing many new land claims. They built a stately home in Faulkton, now owned by the Faulk County Historical Society, where they raised four children and hosted national figures like Susan B. Anthony, Teddy Roosevelt, and Grover Cleveland.

Throughout the first decade of the 1900s, Alice was state president of the South Dakota Equal Suffrage Association. She also supervised the South Dakota Women's Christian Temperance Union. Teetotaling was a cause for which her husband went on to introduce bills, first as a territorial legislator and then as the first U.S. Representative from the newly minted state of South Dakota.

One reason prohibition and women's suffrage were political bedfellows was the era's fixation with the removal of corruption and vice, says Sara Egge. Egge, who was born and raised in Yankton, is a history professor at Centre College in Danville, Kentucky and author of Woman Suffrage and Citizenship in the Midwest, 1870-1920. Egge illustrates the pro-suffragist thinking at the time: "Women with their moral authority are best situated to endorse and bring these kinds of reforms," says Egge. "We'll need prohibition, and for them, they would see women's suffrage as a positive. If women could vote, our homes will be better. Our children will have better education. Our streets will be cleaner. Our sanitary conditions will be better. Our food will be safer." Nonetheless, in 1916 women's suffrage did not pass while prohibition did. "People have puzzled on that," says Egge.

This thorny entanglement of the anti-alcohol movement and women's suffrage, searing issues on local and national levels at the time, was but one major bump on South Dakota's protracted road to ratification, a path marked by six failed attempts at legislation before its passing in 1919. While Native Americans did not gain the right to vote until 1924 via the Snyder Act and its tragically ironic granting of full citizenship — and subsequently voting rights — to Indigenous people, South Dakota's growing immigrant settler populations were also a flashpoint for women's suffrage rights. During the first campaign for the women's suffrage amendment in 1890, South Dakota's non-citizen German, Norwegian, Swedish, Irish, Czech and other immigrant males had voting rights granted by virtue of their declared intent to naturalize. In spite of vast differences among and between South Dakota's ethnic communities, immigrants were largely lumped together. "National suffragist leaders like Susan B. Anthony, Anna Howard Shaw, and Carrie Chapman Catt who came to South Dakota in 1890 are really hesitant about these immigrants," says Egge. "They don't trust them because they think these immigrants are going to vote against women's suffrage." The 15th Amendment, passed in 1870, prohibited denial of voting rights based on race, color, or previous condition of servitude, but not sex. National leaders like Anthony were frustrated by political compromises that meted out voting rights to former slaves and immigrants but not to women, and the flames of resentment are fanned. Anthony even writes to Alice Pickler that the forming of a third independent party was a machination to put the interests of foreigners over U.S.-born women. "You can see that dynamic at play," says Egge. "They're pitting women against foreigners. But local suffragists are more hesitant to blame immigrants outright, label them as ignorant, because they live among them. They're saying, 'these are our neighbors, our friends, they're voters.' But they are ultimately dismissed."

Then comes war against Germany in 1917 and tables dramatically turn. In an emergency legislative session to create war measures, Governor Peter Norbeck adds a clause to the women's suffrage bill, now known as the "Citizenship Amendment," that women can vote but unnaturalized immigrants cannot. "It's not necessarily at all about women's suffrage," says Egge. "It's about disenfranchising German so-called traitors. Newspaper headlines read, 'If You are 100% American, You'll Vote for Women's Suffrage.' They were using German immigrants as scapegoats. And it was effective, because it changed South Dakotans' minds, finally, to support women's suffrage."

Neither simple, nor always just. ♡

Lucy Worsley's Royal Photo Album explores the key types of photos that have enabled the royal family to conduct a dialogue with the British people, forging a modern monarchy that reigns rather than rules. Along the way, she recreates the Queen's coronation portrait, digs out some of the most photogenic outfits from the royal ceremonial dress collection, has her own Victorian-style picture taken, and learns the tricks of the trade from leading royal photographers Anwar Hussein and Chris Jackson.

Names New Public Editor

Kelly McBride of the Poynter Institute has been named NPR's sixth public editor.

Kelly McBride.

McBride, a distinguished media ethicist, fills the newsroom watchdog role at a time when many other major news outlets have abandoned it.

"I discovered NPR as a journalism student at the University of Missouri in the late 1980s, and converted my parents into supporters during a trip home to Toledo, Ohio," McBride said in a recent column. "I was listening from the West Coast to a bit by humor essayist Molly Ivins in the early morning hours of Sept. 11, 2001, the last time the world collectively changed.

As an ethics specialist at The Poynter Institute, the nonprofit where my colleagues and I help newsrooms elevate their journalism in service of democracy, I've admired the diligence and thoughtfulness of NPR's extensive ethics code. Over the years, I've lent my own expertise in covering suicide, sexual assault, mental health, mass shootings, immigration and vulnerable people to many an NPR journalist. As the Public Editor, I aim to share that expertise with you, the audience, as we collectively work to understand and improve the work at NPR.

For NPR to be consistently great, in my view it must do three things. First, it must constantly deepen its connection to the audience, while building awareness of what that audience needs. Second, NPR journalists must embrace the highest standards of their craft. And finally, NPR must expand its audience and ensure that its journalism be more reflective of a diverse American public (a goal it has openly declared one of its highest priorities.)"

The office of Public Editor was created to ensure NPR is responsive to the concerns of listeners and to help NPR remain steadfast in its mission to present fair, accurate and comprehensive information in service of democracy.

While the Public Editor position is funded by NPR, and is selected by NPR's CEO, she has complete autonomy to select topics, investigate complaints and address issues.

What is a Public Editor?

The Public Editor stands as a source of independent accountability. Created by NPR's board of directors, the Public Editor serves as a bridge between the newsroom and the audience. The Public Editor strives to both listen to the audience's concerns and explain the newsroom's work and ambitions.

In the age of social media and fake news going viral in nanoseconds, the work of the Public Editor is more important than ever. Split-second newsroom decisions can generate massive misinformation campaigns, as in the case of the recent NPR Public Editor column, In Choosing The Wrong Photo, NPR Editors Paved The Way For Partisan Attack. As Kelly McBride wrote, "that mistaken photo selection created an inaccuracy that fueled an overblown political narrative captured by the hashtag #defundNPR."

"'Unarmed Black Man' Doesn't Mean What You Think It Means," is another example of concerns the office addresses. The column generated thousands of emails, clicks and shares as journalists and Americans strive for more balanced language that doesn't rely on racist tropes.

One of the most celebrated theatrical releases of 2018, Won't You Be My Neighbor? takes an intimate look at America's favorite neighbor: Fred Rogers. The documentary tells the story of a soft-spoken minister, puppeteer, writer and producer whose show was beamed daily into homes across America for more than 30 years. In his beloved television program, "Mister Rogers' Neighborhood," Rogers and his cast of puppets and friends spoke directly to young children about some of life's weightiest issues in a simple, direct fashion. There hadn't been anything like Mister Rogers on television before, and there hasn't been since.

Diary of a Determined Woman

by Katy Beem

Saturday 4

No wind. Awful heat. Baked us all like an oven. Kids got final report cards. Rita all A's. Joan got a C in conduct. I told her better. She folded her arms and stuck out her lip.

In Mitchell during the “Dirty 30s,” Margaret Spader Neises, a young mother, wife, and phenomenally hard worker, was committed to keeping her concerns alive: children, farm animals, vegetable gardens, relationships, experiences. In seven small ruled notebooks, premiums from The Old Line Cedar Rapids Life Insurance Company, cover embossed with a fat, juicy cob of corn, Margaret recorded her daily domestic matters. The events Margaret tenaciously chronicled in sparse entries of 2-4 cursive sentences are deceptively quotidian, but like many journals from working class women throughout time, they capture snapshots that help illustrate a panoramic view of life during a time that tried many souls.

We follow Margaret through boredom and upheave. After farm life becomes unsustainable, she documents the quest to find affordable housing in Mitchell large enough to shelter her growing Catholic brood. While her prose is economical and restrained, a reader can sense the diary offered an outlet and respite from myriad frustrations: her husband's intermittent jobs, the banker nipping at their heels, an overly flirtatious neighbor, the Sysphisian endeavor to keep a clean house when perched precariously on the Dust Bowl's edge. Coded into the text with underlines and stars are milestones: the births of babies, the serious sickness of loved ones, the death of her mother.

Wednesday 1

Made Pa come to supper. He brought most of the last of their spuds. Said he couldn't eat that many alone anyway. 4 bu. Sure glad. Paying 55¢ a bu here.

Margaret's grandson Craig Volk based A Dust Bowl Book of Days, 1932, on his grandmother's journals as well as an unpublished memoir of his mother, Joan (the petulant C-getter in conduct.) Volk, who was born and raised in Mitchell, is a professor of theatre, film and video production at the University of Colorado-Denver. Volk was a writer for Northern Exposure and has published three books of poetry.

Volk inherited Margaret's diaries from his mother, who passed away in 1999, and while he'd always kept them in view and therefore in mind, he'd never read them deeply until a recent sabbatical. "Then I realized how much I actually had," says Volk. "They're these little, little books. One thinks 'How can so much information and connection to her and her life be in these little, short passages?' It was like creating a crazy quilt, finding these fragments, images and occasional little sections of dialogue that were more like reflective thought. I realized, 'Boy! What a remarkable woman she was.'"

Volk met Margaret only twice. She died young, a loss that deeply marked Volk's mother, who later wrote about it in her own diary. Volk used artistic license to merge his mother's diary passages into the book. "Grandmother Margaret was, even in her diaries, a Catholic woman growing up in the first half of the 20th century. She wasn't always forthcoming about what she was feeling, her doubts and misgivings. So, the passages about Grandma Margaret's death, I drew more from my mother. That's really both of them, in a way."

Taciturn though Margaret's entries may be, many vividly convey a scene. "I fell under the sway of the imagist poets when I was in high school and that the best way to get at any real theme is to contextualize it with concrete images," says Volk. "William Carlos Williams says, 'No ideas, but in things.' Margaret had a sense of that. She was exhausted, oftentimes not feeling well. She would write about the mundane, the day-to-day things, her fears. Every now and then this would generate a powerful image that spoke reams to me. She was an imagist poet in the making."

Volk says it's no coincidence he became a writer. "I know from my grandmother's and mother's diaries that they were both great readers. I can never recall not seeing my mother reading at night. My mother was always very pleased that I went into the arts. She and my father were both very supportive, even for all the worrisome struggles until I was able to be financially secure."

Not a small leap of faith for children of the Dust Bowl. "That dark cloud followed them forever," says Volk. "Even though my dad had been to war, I had relatives who had been gassed in World War I, folks who had a really difficult life. But the real dark cloud wasn't the Great War, it was the Great Depression. My father was a car salesman. He always said if it rained an inch, he'd sell two cars. There's the idea that you put money away for a rainy day. But in South Dakota, you save money for the un-rainy day."🐦

New Local Host for All Things Considered

SDPB welcomes Megan Feighery as our local host for All Things Considered. Megan joins the staff after a stint at Wyoming Public Media, the public radio network of stations serving the Cowboy State.

“As a lifelong Laura Ingalls Wilder fan, the wind-swept prairies of South Dakota have always fascinated me,” writes Megan. “I marveled at the idea of being able to stand in one place and see nothing but sky and land for miles in every direction—something the city streets of Southern California, where I grew up, did not offer.”

Megan earned a Bachelor’s and Master’s degree from Cal State, Fullerton. Something of a world traveler, Megan spent a year in the Republic of Georgia, and four years in Japan.

“I am beyond thrilled to join the SDPB team and have the opportunity to be the voice of All Things Considered.”

You’ll hear Megan hosting All Things Considered weekdays on SDPB beginning in August.

Megan Feighery.

Three generations of the Phadke family live together in their home in Mumbai. Chez Jolie Coiffure is a highly revealing documentary, capturing the day-to-day lives and concerns of immigrant West African women in a space they can call their own. More than a place for women to get their hair done, Jolie Coiffure serves as a community hub for West African women in a space not much larger than a take-out stand.

Home or Classroom

SDPB Is Here to Help All Students Succeed

As another school year approaches in the midst of COVID-19, educators, parents, and students face a multitude of uncertainties.

SDPB has created SDPB Learners Connection and other free, online K-12 ed resources to help South Dakota students and teachers at-home and in the classroom.

SDPB.org/LearnersConnection

Here, teachers and caregivers will find a bounty of free resources: lesson plans and distance learning activities for K-12 students, crafts for kids, kitchen classroom ideas, free learning apps, selected online articles, and links to resources for early learners.

e-Newsletters for Educators & Caregivers

SDPB's resident education experts specialize in providing online resources to support educators, parents, and learners. Our electronic newsletters bring curated resources straight to your inbox, so you don't have to endlessly hunt and scroll for quality content. Visit SDPB.org and click "Email Sign-up" to join.

At SDPB.org/Learn, find South Dakota-specific content like:

Native American Studies Videos

Want to learn more about Native American boarding schools, reservations, and land stewardship? What are Winter Counts and how are they crucial to understanding Great Plains history? For PreK-4, SDPB's Steven Rokusek assisted in the development of a Native American Studies video series in close partnership with Technology & Innovation in Education (TIE) and the WoLakota Project in Rapid City, a program supporting students in rural, high-need schools and incorporating Oceti Sakowin Essential Understandings, a curriculum and coursework in South Dakota American Indian history and culture. Access these videos to jumpstart crucial local cultural learning activities.

A Push in the Right Direction

Even in the era of GPS, knowing west from east develops spatial reasoning and confidence in kids. This engaging animated video series for PreK-4 social studies concepts includes cardinal and intermediate directions, map-reading, and the time concepts of past, present, and future.

Dissection 101

SDPB adds to its well-received Dissection 101 series with more videos, lesson plans and quizzes on dissections of crayfish, clams, earthworms and more. The video series provides an alternative teaching tool for classrooms with limited resources or the faint-of-heart.

Art Basics with Dick Termes

Fun for all ages, Art Basics with Dick Termes: Drawing is a multi-part video series featuring renowned South Dakota "Termesphere" artist Dick Termes teaching basic drawing techniques. Features 5+ hours of content in 20 individual videos, activities, a teacher's guide, and lesson plans.

Parents and educators can also contact an SDPB Education staff member to help with any questions about resources through SDPB and PBS.

SDPB in the Community

SDPB continues to be mindful of the health and public safety of our supporters and staff members. To ensure we still connect with you, some events have gone virtual. Here are some events from the past month where we engaged with our audience.

SDPB Virtual Screening of American Experience The Vote with Prof. Molly Rozum

On July 1, SDPB hosted a live screening of The Vote, a PBS documentary on the history of women's suffrage, with remarks and Q & A by USD history professor Molly Rozum. Members were able to see a preview of the upcoming American Experience documentary and ask questions to Rozum in real time.

Neutrino Day Goes Virtual

SDPB's "Science" Steve Rokusek was a contributor in Sanford Lab's virtual Neutrino Day this year.

A virtual experience was new for Rokusek. "I have presented at the annual Neutrino Day event since the beginning. Each year I try to develop 2-4 new demonstrations for the event. In the past I tested the new demos at Neutrino Day; if the audience liked a demo then I would use it at future events."

As SDPB's Education Specialist, Rokusek makes science fun for audiences of all ages with humorous demonstrations that bring to life the laws of physics, chemistry, anatomy and more.

"This year I went through the process of making 2 new demos, from building to testing on video.

Both of the new demos use common plumbing supplies, Ping-Pong balls, and a vacuum or leaf blower. The first demo demonstrates pressure and how air flows to an area of least resistance. The second demo demonstrates the movement of an object from an area of high pressure to low pressure.

I miss the interaction with the audience and I love the way the audience leads the show by asking questions and becoming involved. I am happy to share the two new demos virtually and look forward to showing them in person."

Speakers, live chats with scientists, hands-on activities, Native American activities, and facility tours—everything you loved about Neutrino Day has been recorded and archived at neutrinoday.com for viewers.

Science Steve events are supported in part by 3M and Avera.

SDPB SUPPORTER SPOTLIGHT

JANET KAHLER, RAPID CITY

Originally from Winner, Janet Kahler has made Rapid City her home since 1983, when she and her husband Monte, who was born in Colome, moved back to South Dakota after some 16 years in San Diego. In California, Monte, who passed away last summer, drove for Greyhound, among other endeavors, and he and Janet raised their daughter, Deonne, a writer and photographer. “San Diego was getting big and we got tired of it,” says Kahler. “We love the Hills. We came back here one fall just to check out where we might want to relocate. It was October. We went to Canyon Lake. It was a gorgeous fall, with beautiful colors. We said, ‘Okay, this is it.’ We make decisions pretty fast.”

The loss of Monte was difficult, but tempered by daughter Deonne’s own relocation to Rapid City to be closer to her parents. “Monte was quite delighted Deonne was going to be here,” says Janet. “It was the first time since she was in college that we all lived in the same city. It’s such a treat having her here.”

Janet says she gives to SDPB and other organizations that benefit children and women because she recognizes her blessings. “I have been blessed in so many ways — health and everything,” says Janet. “How can you not feel good about giving back to the community? My daughter is the same way. This is important to us. I know SDPB relies on donations. You don’t get a lot from the state, and at times they talk about defunding public broadcasting. Well, I love South Dakota Public Broadcasting. I listen to NPR when I get up in the morning and the more I listen, the more I love the programming. I love that its commercial-free.”

Janet has been a Friend of SDPB for 16 years because she appreciates programs like Vanished South Dakota, Christiane Amanpour & Company, Masterpiece, and PBS Passport streaming service. “I purposely contribute to SDPB programming because I want this programming to be kept up. The local, the entertainment, the education – all of the programming for kids as we’re going through the school shutdowns.”

When she learned she could give more through her IRA without penalties, both Janet and her financial planner were pleased. “Our accountant, who we’ve had for 30 years, thinks it’s great. He says he wishes more people would do it, if they have the means.”

Janet says she simply didn’t know she could give more without penalties and that setting it up was simple, even after she switched brokers. “It’s on top of my regular deductions. I thought you just had to get what the IRS told you that you could withdraw at a time. It’s not a huge amount, but I’m able to give more.”

The past year has been one of great change for Janet and her family. “I just have a real passion for what you guys are doing,” says Janet. “I really do. It just makes me smile thinking about it. So now I’m listening more and I’m giving more.”
