Today, the headlines are filled with speculation about changes in the U.S. Supreme Court and what those changes might mean for abortion -- an issue that has divided the country for over 30 years. Heated rhetoric from both sides continues to be heard in courtrooms and on the campaign trail. But while attention is often focused on the arguments, there is another story playing out in local communities. Pro-life advocates have waged a successful campaign to reduce abortions in many places throughout the country. By using state laws to regulate and limit abortion and by creating their own clinics to offer alternatives to women, they have changed the facts on the ground. FRONTLINE investigates the steady decline in the number of physicians and clinics performing abortions and focuses on local political battles in states like Mississippi, where only a single clinic performs the controversial procedure.

Every year, more than a million people visit the Rotunda at the National Archives in Washington to gaze at three documents that define our nation's heritage: the Declaration of Independence, the Constitution and the Bill of Rights. But these touchstones of democracy are in serious trouble. The ink is flaking from parchments that are already badly faded, while the glass casements built to exhibit them are disintegrating. To head off the danger, the Archives embarked on a five-year project to design state-of-the-art encasements and a new rotunda. NOVA was given exclusive behind-the-scenes access to this unique project from start to finish. The result is a brilliant evocation of the colorful history of these documents and an insider's look at the extraordinary engineering efforts that are safeguarding America's equivalent of the Crown Jewels.

An intriguing story about the lives and times of Lise Meitner and Otto Hahn, two remarkable scientists whose extraordinary collaboration culminated in the discovery of nuclear fission in 1938, turning Einstein's "theory" into atomic science. Not only did these two revolutionize the history of science and the role of women in physics and chemistry, their tale also parallels the social changes and turbulent history of their times. It involves the war against memory, Nazi intimidation, forced exile, betrayal, and a Nobel Prize awarded only in chemistry that to this day distorts science history. This documentary explores the development of atomic science in the first part of the twentieth century. It captures Meitner's efforts to make her way in the male-dominated world of physics, Hahn's early work and independent discoveries, their collaboration, the racial and political discrimination that forced Meitner to live in exile, and ongoing speculation about her exclusion from the Nobel Prize. These elements are explored through photos, letters, notes, stock footage, and maps; interviews with writers, scientists, and historians; and music of the day. Sound effects and animated graphics are employed in the presentation of the science.

"Small Fortunes: Microcredit and the Future of Poverty" explores the issues of poverty and microcredit as it features profiles of numerous recipients of small loans in locales ranging from India to the Philippines to New York City. The one-hour documentary tells the stories of how short-term loans of even a few dollars have resulted in dramatic changes in lifestyles for families who otherwise would have no means of lifting themselves out of poverty. The film also interviews bankers, economists, scholars and other experts on past, present and potential successes of microcredit programs.

Every year, more than a million people visit the Rotunda at the National Archives in Washington to gaze at three documents that define our nation's heritage: the Declaration of Independence, the Constitution and the Bill of Rights. But these touchstones of democracy are in serious trouble. The ink is flaking from parchments that are already badly faded, while the glass casements built to exhibit them are disintegrating. To head off the danger, the Archives embarked on a five-year project to design state-of-the-art encasements and a new rotunda. NOVA was given exclusive behind-the-scenes access to this unique project from start to finish. The result is a brilliant evocation of the colorful history of these documents and an insider's look at the extraordinary engineering efforts that are safeguarding America's equivalent of the Crown Jewels.

An intriguing story about the lives and times of Lise Meitner and Otto Hahn, two remarkable scientists whose extraordinary collaboration culminated in the discovery of nuclear fission in 1938, turning Einstein's "theory" into atomic science. Not only did these two revolutionize the history of science and the role of women in physics and chemistry, their tale also parallels the social changes and turbulent history of their times. It involves the war against memory, Nazi intimidation, forced exile, betrayal, and a Nobel Prize awarded only in chemistry that to this day distorts science history. This documentary explores the development of atomic science in the first part of the twentieth century. It captures Meitner's efforts to make her way in the male-dominated world of physics, Hahn's early work and independent discoveries, their collaboration, the racial and political discrimination that forced Meitner to live in exile, and ongoing speculation about her exclusion from the Nobel Prize. These elements are explored through photos, letters, notes, stock footage, and maps; interviews with writers, scientists, and historians; and music of the day. Sound effects and animated graphics are employed in the presentation of the science.

In this episode, "NOVA" explores the history and science of explosives. When Chinese alchemists experimented with various properties during the ninth century -- ironically in the search for a medicine that would make them immortal -- a crude form of gunpowder was created and modern explosives were born. Scientists, including Alfred Nobel, began their quest for the perfect explosive compound. When Nobel, a noted pacifist, harnessed the power of nitroglycerine and invented dynamite, he changed warfare forever. His impact and those of other scientists are chronicled in "Kaboom!"

Bob Dylan participates for the first time in an exclusive, full-length film biography. From his explosive arrival on the downtown New York City scene in 1961 - with a raspy voice, pounding guitar and stunning lyrics - through his near-fatal motorcycle accident in Woodstock in 1966, no one had more of an impact and no one changed the landscape of contemporary music more profoundly. Private, almost reclusive, disdainful of customary forms of publicity, Dylan has now agreed to make an appearance in his own story, illuminated in particular by this remarkable five-year period. Directed by Martin Scorsese, this intimate and incomparable film includes an archive of never-before-seen footage from childhood, from the road and from backstage, as well as unreleased interviews conducted over the past 15 years with other seminal figures from those times - some of whom, like Allan Ginsberg, are long dead. And, Dylan brings the rights to his legendary music with him - "Blowin' in the Wind," "Like a Rolling Stone," "Don't Think Twice," "Mr. Tambourine Man," "It Ain't Me Babe," "Just Like a Woman," "Positively 4th Street," "The Times They Are A-Changin'" - and on and on.

How Art Made the World takes viewers on a 5-part quest to comprehend art's far-reaching influence over society. Acclaimed art historian and University of Cambridge lecturer Dr. Nigel Spivey leads viewers on an exploration of mankind's unique capacity to understand the world through artistic imagery. Each one-hour episode begins with a modern-day mystery which Spivey then untangles through the examination of 100,000 years of amazing artifacts. More than a survey of art history, How Art Made the World examines one of the most basic characteristics of humanity - the inclination to make art.

Republicans? And how much will events on the ground and U.S. public opinion affect the debate in Washington? The war on terror at home- a secret investigative tactic is revealed - the government's been tracking money transfers without your knowledge. But how broad is the government sweep? At the Supreme Court, a unanimous ruling in favor of employees' rights. What does it tell us about the intentions of the Roberts' court? And in federal court, a former Bush administration aide is convicted on charges arising out of ties to former lobbyist Jack Abramoff. Where else do those ties lead? Covering these stories this week: Dan Balz of the Washington Post; Doyle McManus of the Los Angeles Times; Linda Greenhouse of the New York Times; and Jeanne Cummings of the Wall Street Journal.

As oil and gas companies continue to make enormous profits in a time of record-high gas prices, watchdog groups are accusing these companies of shortchanging American taxpayers on billions of dollars in royalties for drilling rights on public property. "These oil companies along with some members of Congress have really engineered one of the greatest train robberies of all time," says California Congressman George Miller. NOW investigates oil royalty manipulation and speaks to a whistleblower who says oversight control was weakened to keep more money in the coffers of Big Oil. Who's following the money, and who's keeping it? Get ready for a crude awakening. Next time on NOW.

This episode takes the notion of the three R's (reduce, reuse, recycle) to grand proportions by looking at Boston's "Big Dig" and the massive amount of waste that accompanies the $15 billion project. Paul Pedini, a civil engineer on the project, had the idea to build his own home from the Big Dig waste. The success of this project has sparked plans to create an office complex in Massachusetts from the same recycled material. These innovative projects serve as prototypes to demonstrate to city officials that there is value in recycling on such a grand level.

The series then moves to China, whose soaring population and rapid industrialization have created a boom in urbanization that is unprecedented in human history. In an attempt to tackle this global issue, "China: From Red to Green?" explores design solutions in both theory and practice, including Steven Holl's Linked Hybrid Project, which when completed will be the largest residential, geothermal heating/cooling and greywater recycling system in the world. Also featured in this episode is architect, designer and winner of three U.S. Presidential Awards, William McDonough. Recognized by Time Magazine as "Hero of the Planet," McDonough talks about his innovative plans to make China an entirely sustainable country and how it will demonstrate the ways architecture can be both profitable and environmentally intelligent.

This is the 35-year epic story of Kusasi, the male orangutan at Camp Leakey in Indonesia, whose life is both the most well-documented and the most mysterious of any of his kind in the world. He began life as an orphan, a prisoner and a fugitive. Then he taught himself the ropes, watched his own back, trusted no one and rose to the top, where he has reigned for 15 years. Will the current power struggle between Kusasi and his rivals bring about his downfall? This is an extraordinary journey into the secret lives of males orangutans, about which comparatively little has been known until now.

"Toxic Transport" Every day, thousands of tons of deadly chemicals are moving through our towns and cities, largely unguarded and vulnerable to a terrorist attack. The government knows that, if attacked, these shipments could cause great harm and many fatalities, but are we doing enough about it? NOW investigates how, nearly five years after 9/11, our trains, boats and trucks carrying hazardous materials could be left so defenseless. Former Deputy Homeland Security Advisor Richard Falkenrath calls the exposure of these chemicals "the single greatest danger of a potential terrorist attack in our country."

As oil and gas companies continue to make enormous profits in a time of record-high gas prices, watchdog groups are accusing these companies of shortchanging American taxpayers on billions of dollars in royalties for drilling rights on public property. "These oil companies along with some members of Congress have really engineered one of the greatest train robberies of all time," says California Congressman George Miller. NOW investigates oil royalty manipulation and speaks to a whistleblower who says oversight control was weakened to keep more money in the coffers of Big Oil. Who's following the money, and who's keeping it? Get ready for a crude awakening. Next time on NOW.

Every branch of government weighed in this week on war, government secrets, workers' rights, and corruption. Tonight on "Washington Week," the Senate debates Iraq. Should we stay or should we go? Can the Democrats agree on a plan? Can the Republicans? And how much will events on the ground and U.S. public opinion affect the debate in Washington? The war on terror at home- a secret investigative tactic is revealed - the government's been tracking money transfers without your knowledge. But how broad is the government sweep? At the Supreme Court, a unanimous ruling in favor of employees' rights. What does it tell us about the intentions of the Roberts' court? And in federal court, a former Bush administration aide is convicted on charges arising out of ties to former lobbyist Jack Abramoff. Where else do those ties lead? Covering these stories this week: Dan Balz of the Washington Post; Doyle McManus of the Los Angeles Times; Linda Greenhouse of the New York Times; and Jeanne Cummings of the Wall Street Journal.

Often hailed as both the first modern scientist and the last of the ancient magicians, Isaac Newton reduced nature's chaos to a single set of mathematical laws. More than three centuries later, those laws still govern the way we analyze and forecast the motions of everything from roller coasters to comets. Besides his fundamental breakthroughs in physics, optics and calculus, Newton poured vast energy into fruitless explorations of alchemy and religion. With lively period re-creations of key moments in his career and replications of his experiments in optics and alchemy, NOVA explores how Newton became the giant upon whose shoulders all later scientists found a place to stand.

"Toxic Transport" Every day, thousands of tons of deadly chemicals are moving through our towns and cities, largely unguarded and vulnerable to a terrorist attack. The government knows that, if attacked, these shipments could cause great harm and many fatalities, but are we doing enough about it? NOW investigates how, nearly five years after 9/11, our trains, boats and trucks carrying hazardous materials could be left so defenseless. Former Deputy Homeland Security Advisor Richard Falkenrath calls the exposure of these chemicals "the single greatest danger of a potential terrorist attack in our country."

What the Iraq debate tells us about the Congress, the president, and about Iraq itself, tonight on Washington Week. Congress debates Iraq. Stay or go? Set a timetable or not? It seems like everyone weighed in. President Bush punctuated his position this week with a surprise trip to Iraq. We look at what happened on the ground. While he was gone, good news: his chief political aide, Karl Rove, will not be indicted in the CIA leak case. What does it all mean? We look at the politics, the polls and the substance of the week's developments with the reporters who have been covering them: Karen Tumulty at Time Magazine, Richard Keil of Bloomberg News, Gloria Borger of CBS News and U.S. News, and John Harwood of CNBC and the Wall Street Journal.

Every branch of government weighed in this week on war, government secrets, workers' rights, and corruption. Tonight on "Washington Week," the Senate debates Iraq. Should we stay or should we go? Can the Democrats agree on a plan? Can the Republicans? And how much will events on the ground and U.S. public opinion affect the debate in Washington? The war on terror at home- a secret investigative tactic is revealed - the government's been tracking money transfers without your knowledge. But how broad is the government sweep? At the Supreme Court, a unanimous ruling in favor of employees' rights. What does it tell us about the intentions of the Roberts' court? And in federal court, a former Bush administration aide is convicted on charges arising out of ties to former lobbyist Jack Abramoff. Where else do those ties lead? Covering these stories this week: Dan Balz of the Washington Post; Doyle McManus of the Los Angeles Times; Linda Greenhouse of the New York Times; and Jeanne Cummings of the Wall Street Journal.

The highest Court in the land concludes its biggest week of the year with two blockbuster decisions: one, striking down the U.S. system of holding and trying detainees at the Guantanamo Naval Base in Cuba. Another upholding a politically motivated congressional map in Texas while rejecting a racially motivated one. What did these decisions tell us about this court and about this administration? Plus, the president, the vice president, and the House of Representatives all join forces to condemn journalists who disclose secrets. A contentious week in the capital. We take its measure with the reporters who have been covering it: Linda Greenhouse of the New York Times, Joan Biskupic of USA Today, John Harwood of the Wall Street Journal; and Alexis Simendinger of National Journal.
