Service: PBS

What does a family have to endure to create a future for itself? In April 2000, Alex White Plume and his Lakota family planted industrial hemp on the Pine Ridge Reservation in South Dakota after other crops had failed. They put their hopes for a sustainable economy in hemp's hardiness and a booming worldwide demand for its many products, from clothing to food. Although growing hemp, a relative of marijuana, was banned in the U.S., Alex believed that tribal sovereignty, along with hemp's non-psychoactive properties, would protect him. But when federal agents raided the White Plumes' fields, the Lakota Nation was swept into a Byzantine struggle over tribal sovereignty, economic rights and common sense. Director: Suree Towfighnia; producer: Courtney Hermann.

How do we get out of Iraq and if we do, does the terror threat grow or diminish? That plus why money matters on the campaign trail and on Wall Street tonight on "Washington Week." In Washington and Baghdad it's all about the clock. Senator George Voinovich (R-OH) said, "What are you doing to let them know that this time is running out? The time is running out." Republicans want to get out of Iraq. Democrats want to get out of Iraq, but the president and the generals say "give us just a little more time." LIEUTENANT GENERAL ODIERNO said, "I'm hoping that this will continue over the next two to three months, another reason why as we give our assessment in September it's important that we have a bit more time so we can do evaluation of this progress." But is when the right question? What about how and who? Is al Qaeda the threat it's cracked up to be? A new intelligence report says yes, but Iraq may not be the biggest problem. On the campaign trail, we follow the money and the candidates raising it. What do the dollars tell us about what kind of president they would be? Governor Bill Richardson said, "This election should not be on who the biggest celebrity is or who has the most money or who's the biggest rock star, although I'm working on that." And on Wall Street only good news, so why is this guy so down beat? Covering the week, Michael Duffy of Time Magazine, Mark Mazzetti of the New York Times, Jeanne Cummings of The Politico, and David Wessel of the Wall Street Journal.

The economy is on the mind of the president, and so is the precarious position of Pakistan's leader. Plus, GOP politics in middle America. I'm Alexis Simendinger sitting in for Gwen Ifill. All this, tonight on Washington Week. The president heads for his summer vacation by drawing a few lines in the sand, about the economy - President George W. Bush said, "The American economy is the envy of the world and we need to keep it that way." - about Iraq - Pres. Bush said, "The fundamental question facing America is, is it worth it? Does it matter whether or not we stay? My answer is it does matter." and about a looming battle with Congress in the fall. Pres. Bush said "The bill Congress sent to my desk leaves some of the key priorities unfulfilled." Is it the calm before the autumn storm for the commander-in-chief? Pres. Bush said, "Put up your dukes." He's a key ally in the fight against terrorism and a nuclear player too, but could Pervez Musharraf's days be numbered? And if so, what could that mean for the United States? And all eyes are on Iowa this week for an early GOP test of organization and support. A look at the national frontrunner - Mayor Rudolph Giuliani (R-NY) said, "A description of my mistakes in 30 seconds?" - and how his northeast urban sensibilities are playing in the heartland. Plus, the topsy-turvy primary calendar takes another twist. Could voting for campaign '08 actually start in 2007? Covering these stories this week: Peter Baker of the "Washington Post," Janine Zacharia of Bloomberg News, and Karen Tumulty of "TIME" magazine.

This year, Back to School checks in on the students, now in third grade, some with their future education almost assured and others clearly in danger of dropping out. Like Michael Apted's 7-Up film series, Wide Angle will periodically visit these children through 2015 to update the events of their lives and their progress. How many will successfully graduate? How many will drop out, and why? What differences will we see between the boys and the girls? These children's stories will offer rich insight to American audiences about the striking disparities of circumstance and opportunity in different countries around the world.

They're the flood victims who were left behind --the tens of thousands of household pets separated from their owners in the aftermath of Hurricane Katrina. Now, in this special episode of Nature, we take you to the front lines of the battle to rescue these helpless animals -- before it's too late. We travel with animal rescue teams by small boat through the flooded streets of the devastated city, searching for survivors -- a dog stranded on a rooftop -- a kitten trapped in the branches of a tree -- all without food and water for days -- or weeks. With the odds against them, rescuers use any means necessary -- up to and including a National Guard tank -- to reach these animals in distress. We're there as they retrieve the animals, and then -- amazingly, amidst all the chaos and destruction -- reunite the lucky few with their owners. Along the way, we'll see what happened to the other animal inhabitants of New Orleans -- from the zoo and aquarium to the wildlife of Lake Pontchartrain. Witness the heroic efforts to save Katrina's animal victims -- on Nature.

NOVA presents a minute-by-minute eyewitness account of the Hurricane Katrina disaster, exploring why the flood defenses and disaster relief planning failed to match Katrina's fury. What made this storm so deadly? How accurately did scientists predict its impact? And why are powerful hurricanes like Katrina likely to strike more often? The program will investigate the immense challenges posed by rebuilding New Orleans, and why--despite all the knowledge of the peril faced by its citizens--the city was so tragically unprepared when the long-feared disaster finally struck.

In the fall of 2003, one of the largest recorded wildfires in California's history destroyed over 2,200 houses and killed fifteen people. Soon after, many who'd lost their homes had a rude awakening: their insurance did not nearly cover their losses as expected. The insurance industry, which claims to cover "more property, more lives, more liability-related risks than any time at history," is busy fighting allegations that customers are receiving smaller payouts than what they were promised. NOW collaborates with Bloomberg Markets magazine to investigate tactics some insurance companies may be using to reduce, avoid, or stall homeowners' claims in an effort to boost their own earnings.

Edward Osborne Wilson grew up off the gulf coast of Alabama and Florida, becoming fascinated at a very early age by the diversity of the natural world surrounding him. After blinding himself in one eye while fishing at the age of 7, Wilson explains that he no longer was very good at bird-watching, so decided to "turn towards the little things in life," namely ants. At 13, he discovered the first U.S. colony of fire ants near the docks of Mobile, Alabama, well on his way to becoming one of the country's foremost myrmecologists (ant biologists), discovering the ways intricate chemical signals affect colony behavior. While a professor at Harvard, Wilson used his insect expertise as the basis for larger study into animal and human behavior, releasing in 1975, SOCIOBIOLOGY: THE NEW SYNTHESIS, advancing Darwin's study of evolution into the realm of behavior.

The horrified writer, Richard Ogust, stopped the execution, bought the turtle for 20 bucks and installed her in a tank at home, naming her "The Empress." And that started him on a quest to save the world's endangered turtles, to which he devoted ever more of his time and resources. When the national and international media found him, Ogust was portrayed as a somewhat eccentric figure sharing a Manhattan penthouse with 1,200 turtles, including several species extinct in the wild. It became an "only in New York" moment in the entertainment firmament.

John James Audubon - whose name became synonymous with American conservation - killed thousands of birds during his quest to create Birds of America, arguably the largest and most beautiful book of the 19th century. Audubon was at once entrepreneur, artist, scientist, husband, father, legend - and walking contradiction. Born in what is now Haiti, the illegitimate son of a French plantation owner and his mistress, Audubon ultimately became the quintessential American pioneer. On the frontier, he played the debonair European. In the drawing rooms of Europe, he acted the part of wild woodsman. Although faithful to his long-suffering wife, he nonetheless wrote her lengthy letters bursting with details of his encounters with other women. Jailed once for bankruptcy, he went on to dine at the White House. The self-taught artist and self-made man was praised by royalty, shunned by his in-laws and blackballed by the Philadelphia Academy of Natural Sciences. AMERICAN MASTERS "John James Audubon: Drawn From Nature," details Audubon's epic adventures while capturing the full-scale beauty of his definitive book.

Interweaving biography and social history, Typhoid Mary tells the extraordinary story of Mary Mallon, once called the most dangerous woman in America. She gained this notoriety by being the first person in North America to be identified as a healthy carrier of typhoid fever. Despite her indignant protests of innocence, she was incarcerated for years on an island in the East River. Mary Mallon's saga throws into vivid relief the emerging science of public health and the social, ethical, and legal dilemmas it posed to its pioneers at the turn of the twentieth century.

Roughly one in seven of America's active duty military soldiers is a woman, but a NOW investigation found that sexual assault and rape is widespread. One study of National Guard and Reserve forces found that almost one in four women had been assaulted or raped. Last year alone, almost 3,000 soldiers reported sexual assault and rape by other soldiers. NOW features women who speak out for the first time about what happened. One woman recounts her ordeal of rape by her superior officer. Many more don't report the incidents for fear of how it will affect their careers. The shocking phenomenon has a label: military sexual trauma, or MST. NOW meets women courageously battling to overcome their MST, bringing light to an issue that's putting the army in shame. A NOW exclusive investigation.

How far would you go to stop a war? "The Camden 28" recalls a 1971 raid on a Camden, New Jersey, draft board office by "Catholic left" activists protesting the Vietnam War and its effects on urban America. Arrested on site in a clearly planned sting, the protesters included four Catholic priests, a Lutheran minister and 23 others. The film reveals the story behind the arrests - a provocative tale of government intrigue and personal betrayal - and the ensuing legal battle, which Supreme Court Justice William Brennan called "one of the great trials of the 20th century." Thirty-five years later, the participants take stock of their motives, fears and the costs of their activism - and its relevance to America today. By Anthony Giacchino.

After an overview of the Second World War, which engulfed the world from 1939 to 1945 and cost at least 50 million lives, inhabitants of four towns - Mobile, Alabama; Sacramento, California; Waterbury, Connecticut; and Luverne, Minnesota - recall their communities on the eve of the conflict. For them, the events overseas seem far away. Their tranquil lives are shattered by the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor, and America is thrust into the great cataclysm. Along with millions of other young men, Sid Phillips and Willie Rushton of Mobile, Ray Leopold of Waterbury and Walter Thompson and Burnett Miller of Sacramento enter the armed forces. In the Philippines, two Americans, Corporal Glenn Frazier and Sascha Weinzheimer (who was eight years old in 1941), are caught up in the Japanese onslaught there, as American and Filipino forces retreat onto Bataan while thousands of civilians are rounded up and imprisoned in Manila. Back home, 110,000 Japanese Americans along the West Coast are forcibly relocated by the government to internment camps. On the East Coast, German U-boats menace Allied shipping offshore. The United States seems unprepared for this kind of total war. Witnessing all of this is Katharine Phillips of Mobile and Al McIntosh, editor of the Rock County Star Herald in Luverne, who chronicles the travails of every family in town. In June 1942, the Navy manages a victory over the Japanese at the Battle of Midway. In August, American land forces, including Sid Phillips of Mobile, face the Japanese army for the first time at Guadalcanal. Abandoned by their fleet with no sea or air support, the men are under constant attack. After six months, the Americans finally prevail and, in the process, stop Japan's expansion in the Pacific.

A Civil War enthusiast owns a striking vintage photograph that depicts about 20 older white men in full dress uniform, standing shoulder-to-shoulder with two black men. In Reconstructionist-era America, association between blacks and whites was frequently taboo. So what brought them together for this portrait? Their bond, it turns out, was the Grand Army of the Republic, a remarkable fraternal order organized for war veterans. In fact, integration was actually a GAR standard. The reason? The men had in common an affliction that transcended race -- a struggle with post traumatic stress. History Detectives investigates the first national social group to challenge the color barrier.

Lindsay Graham (R-SC): If you think this war is lost, stop the funding. Bring the troops home with honor. Stop this game of trying to play politics to put Republicans in boxes which will result in people coming back in boxes. The very recipe for political and policy gridlock. What happens next in Iraq? What can happen next? We assess the situation in Washington and on the ground. Plus, the political collapse of Republican senator John McCain: out of money and out of staff. Is he also out of time? Four years ago on May 1, President Bush landed on the aircraft carrier USS Lincoln wearing a flight suit and delivered a speech in front of a giant "Mission Accomplished" banner. He was hailed by media stars as a "breathtaking" example of presidential leadership in toppling Saddam Hussein. Despite profound questions over the failure to locate weapons of mass destruction and the increasing violence in Baghdad, many in the press confirmed the White House's claim that the war was won. MSNBC's Chris Matthews declared, "We're all neo-cons now;" NPR's Bob Edwards said, "The war in Iraq is essentially over;" and Fortune magazine's Jeff Birnbaum said, "It is amazing how thorough the victory in Iraq really was in the broadest context."

According to the recent National Intelligence Estimate, a collaborative document reflecting the knowledge-base of the U.S. Intelligence community: "Al Qaeda is and will remain the most serious threat to the Homeland, as it's central leadership continues to plan high-impact plots, while pushing others in extreme Sunni communities to mimic its efforts and to supplement its capabilities." And President Bush seemed to echo this sentiment when, at a recent speech in West Virginia about our mission in Iraq, he evoked the name "al Qaeda" 27 times. "Many of the spectacular car bombings and killings you see are as a result of al Qaeda - the very same folks that attacked us on September 11th." But how strong truly is the connection between the central al Qaeda network of Osama bin Laden and al Qaeda in Iraq? Some experts argue that the war on terror, with global al Qaeda at its center as the recent NIE tells us, has little to do with the sectarian war in Iraq, and that our presence there and current tactics have actually worked to bolster al Qaeda's position in the world.

A Civil War enthusiast owns a striking vintage photograph that depicts about 20 older white men in full dress uniform, standing shoulder-to-shoulder with two black men. In Reconstructionist-era America, association between blacks and whites was frequently taboo. So what brought them together for this portrait? Their bond, it turns out, was the Grand Army of the Republic, a remarkable fraternal order organized for war veterans. In fact, integration was actually a GAR standard. The reason? The men had in common an affliction that transcended race -- a struggle with post traumatic stress. History Detectives investigates the first national social group to challenge the color barrier.

While cleaning out the basement of an old home he'd recently purchased, a man from San Francisco discovered a stash of strange and colorful posters announcing the "Great Mexican War." They appear to be early 20th century advertising for news film of the Mexican Revolution. The posters read that a man named Charles Pryor made the films. If the posters prove to be authentic, does it mean that this mystery cinematographer was an eyewitness to the Mexican Revolution?

In 1941, during the Nazi occupation of Paris, the Gestapo visited Pablo Picasso's Left Bank flat, where a member of the secret police spied a postcard of the artist's most famous work, Guernica. The giant mural memorialized Germany's 1937 aerial obliteration of a small Basque village. "Was it you who did this?" the Nazi demanded of Picasso, to which he replied, "No. It was you." In the eight-part SIMON SCHAMA'S POWER OF ART, internationally acclaimed scholar and writer Simon Schama recounts that story while challenging viewers with a typically provocative query: "Shouldn't art just stick to what it does best, the delivery of pleasure, and forget about being a paintbrush warrior? How do we get out of Iraq and if we do, does the terror threat grow or diminish? That plus why money matters on the campaign trail and on Wall Street tonight on "Washington Week." In Washington and Baghdad it's all about the clock. Senator George Voinovich (R-OH) said, "What are you doing to let them know that this time is running out? The time is running out." Republicans want to get out of Iraq. Democrats want to get out of Iraq, but the president and the generals say "give us just a little more time." LIEUTENANT GENERAL ODIERNO said, "I'm hoping that this will continue over the next two to three months, another reason why as we give our assessment in September it's important that we have a bit more time so we can do evaluation of this progress." But is when the right question? What about how and who? Is al Qaeda the threat it's cracked up to be? A new intelligence report says yes, but Iraq may not be the biggest problem. On the campaign trail, we follow the money and the candidates raising it. What do the dollars tell us about what kind of president they would be? Governor Bill Richardson said, "This election should not be on who the biggest celebrity is or who has the most money or who's the biggest rock star, although I'm working on that." And on Wall Street only good news, so why is this guy so down beat? The economy is on the mind of the president, and so is the precarious position of Pakistan's leader. Plus, GOP politics in middle America. I'm Alexis Simendinger sitting in for Gwen Ifill. All this, tonight on Washington Week. The president heads for his summer vacation by drawing a few lines in the sand, about the economy - President George W. Bush said, "The American economy is the envy of the world and we need to keep it that way." - about Iraq - Pres. Bush said, "The fundamental question facing America is, is it worth it? Does it matter whether or not we stay? My answer is it does matter." and about a looming battle with Congress in the fall. Pres. Bush said "The bill Congress sent to my desk leaves some of the key priorities unfulfilled." Is it the calm before the autumn storm for the commander-in-chief? Pres. Bush said, "Put up your dukes." He's a key ally in the fight against terrorism and a nuclear player too, but could Pervez Musharraf's days be numbered? And if so, what could that mean for the United States? And all eyes are on Iowa this week for an early GOP test of organization and support. A look at the national frontrunner - Mayor Rudolph Giuliani (R-NY) said, "A description of my mistakes in 30 seconds?" - and how his northeast urban sensibilities are playing in the heartland. Choosing to go to war is both a government's decision and one made by individual enlistees. But changing your mind once you're in the army is a risky decision with serious consequences. We talk to two soldiers who went AWOL and eventually left the Army, but who took very different paths. NOW captures the moment when one man turns himself in, and when another applies for refugee status in Canada, becoming one of the 20,000 soldiers who have deserted the army since the War in Iraq began. Each describes what drove him to follow his conscience over his call to duty, and what penalties and criticism were endured as a result.

THE WAR, a seven-part series directed and produced by Ken Burns and Lynn Novick, tells the story of the Second World War through the personal accounts of a handful of men and women from four quintessentially American towns. The series explores the most intimate human dimensions of the greatest cataclysm in history -- a worldwide catastrophe that touched the lives of every family on every street in every town in America -- and demonstrates that in extraordinary times, there are no ordinary lives.

War, terror, and politics: the stuff that keeps Washington humming even in August, tonight on "Washington Week." Terror suspect Jose Padilla guilty on all counts. Craig Morford [Acting U.S. Attorney General] said, "Cases like this one are central to the United States government's efforts to neutralize the threat posed by terrorists and those who support them." But what was Padilla, a U.S. citizen, found guilty of? A hint: it was not for plotting to set off dirty bombs. In Iraq at least 400 are killed in coordinated attacks far from Baghdad. Major General Benjamin Mixon said, "This is an act of ethnic cleansing, if you will, almost genocide." Civil war or something completely different? And is there a political solution in sight? At home, the nation's most famous political consultant steps aside. President George W. Bush said "Karl Rove is moving on down the road." And the gloves come off in the presidential campaign. Senator Hillary Clinton (D-NY) said, "Apparently I must have struck a nerve." As Democrats and Republicans taken aim at the White House and at each other? Covering the week: Pete Williams of NBC News, James Kitfield of National Journal, Jackie Calmes of the Wall Street Journal, and Dan Balz of the Washington Post.

Legacy time for prime ministers, presidents, would-be presidents, and even preachers tonight on "Washington Week." The tip of the iceberg: senators, generals, and intelligence officials paint a bleak picture of the prospects for success in Iraq. Is a troop drawdown next? Reality check at home, presidential candidates weigh in on the growing credit crisis. What would they do to solve it? The rise of the presidential spouse. Outspoken and invaluable: the women, and the man, who are saying the things the candidates won't. And the role of faith in presidential politics: a new book about the charismatic preacher who started it all. Covering the week: Martha Raddatz of ABC News, Jeffrey Birnbaum of the "Washington Post," Gloria Borger of "U.S. News and World Report," and Michael Duffy of "Time" magazine.

A senator disgraced, an attorney general quits, the primary crunch, and conflicting reports on Iraq, tonight on "Washington Week." A United States senator spiraling toward resignation. Sen. Larry Craig (R-ID), said "I did nothing wrong at the Minneapolis Airport." The five-day scandal about homosexuality, hypocrisy and guilt, and why Republicans are moving so fast to get past the embarrassment. An attorney general prepared to leave town as well. Attorney General Alberto Gonzales said, "I have lived the American dream. Even my worst days as attorney general have been better than my father's best days." But his legacy and his actions remain under scrutiny. The primary clash: as state parties squeeze the voting calendar even more, will Iowa and New Hampshire still be first or will states like Florida and Michigan beat them to the punch? And a series of new reports and a new $50 billion price tag set the stage for yet another showdown over the war in Iraq. Covering the week, John Dickerson of Slate magazine, Pete Williams of NBC News, Karen Tumulty of TIME magazine, and Doyle McManus of the Los Angeles Times.

How far would you go to stop a war? "The Camden 28" recalls a 1971 raid on a Camden, New Jersey, draft board office by "Catholic left" activists protesting the Vietnam War and its effects on urban America. Arrested on site in a clearly planned sting, the protesters included four Catholic priests, a Lutheran minister and 23 others. The film reveals the story behind the arrests - a provocative tale of government intrigue and personal betrayal - and the ensuing legal battle, which Supreme Court Justice William Brennan called "one of the great trials of the 20th century." Thirty-five years later, the participants take stock of their motives, fears and the costs of their activism - and its relevance to America today. By Anthony Giacchino.

Six years later, a critical question continues to haunt America's national psyche: how could the most powerful nation on earth have been so utterly unprepared to protect its homeland? In "9/11: For the Record," a special one-hour analysis of the 9/11 Commission Report first broadcast in 2004, BILL MOYERS JOURNAL connects the dots of what happened that day and the warning signs leading up to it. The program highlights the agonizing close calls, missteps, and outright failures of two successive administrations and America's intelligence and security agencies in the months and years leading up to 9/11.

On the heels of a much-anticipated progress report in Washington, NOW travels to Iraq for an exclusive, hard look at the war through the telling eyes of U.S. soldiers on the ground, and of the families they left behind. We also examine first-hand the so-called "Anbar Awakening," a controversial partnership between U.S. soldiers and Sunni tribal leaders, many of whom had previously been fighting the Americans. Some-including President Bush-are calling this a significant step forward in reestablishing peace and order in Iraq. Hear what soldiers on the ground have to say. We first met the Third Infantry's First Brigade from Georgia's Fort Stewart in a NOW show broadcast last January, only weeks before they headed back to Iraq for the third deployment in four years. As the long months of the "surge" unfold, we see them fighting an elusive enemy that prefers roadside bombs to pitched battles, while back at home their newborns become toddlers, and birthdays and anniversaries come and go. With the personal and political effects of constant redeployment and re-strategizing apparent everywhere, are we at a turning point or a breaking point?
