As drought-desperate California sinks, the risk of flood is rising: California is sinking, and sinking fast. As desperate farmers have turned to drilling to keep their crops green, the removal of groundwater is making the land settle inches lower at a sharp pace. In the Central Valley, that geological drop is actually increasing the flood risk. Nathan Halverson of Reveal for the Center of Investigative Reporting reports in conjunction with KQED.

On Sunday, October 30, 1938, the night before Halloween, millions of Americans gathered around their radios and heard a news bulletin about strange explosions on Mars, followed by other reports that led them to believe an alien invasion was in progress. Relive the thrill of Orson Welles' infamous radio dramatization of H.G. Wells' War of the Worlds, 75 years after it set off one of the biggest mass hysteria events in U.S. history. The film examines the elements that made America ripe for the hoax: America's longtime fascination with life on Mars; the emergence of radio as a powerful new medium; the shocking Hindenburg explosion of 1937; and Welles himself, the 23-year-old wunderkind director of the drama and mischief-maker supreme.

Chaos erupted in the House Republican conference this week after Majority Leader Kevin McCarthy decided to end his bid to replace outgoing Speaker John Boehner. The vote was postponed at the GOP looked for a candidate who could garner support from the establishment and the Party's right flank. Party leaders openly courted Wisconsin Rep. Paul Ryan, who has said multiple times he doesn't want the job. Morning Consult's Reid Wilson reports on the scramble in the House. Plus, Democratic presidential candidate Hillary Clinton announced her opposition to the Pacific trade agreement pushed by her former boss President Obama. The Washington Post's Anne Gearan reports on Clinton's efforts to distance herself from Obama. And Politico's Michael Crowley reports on the Pentagon's decision to end a program that trained Syrian rebels to fight ISIS. The $500 million dollar program trained only a handful of recruits. At the same time, Russia is amplifying its presence in Syria. Meanwhile, the Supreme Court returns for the new term with cases on issues ranging from affirmative action to voting rights. Joan Biskupic of Reuters discusses whether the more liberal wins of the SCOTUS' last session were an irregularity or a pattern set to stick around.

Oregon Shooting Renews Push For Gun Laws, Republican House Leadership Shakeup and Russian Airstrikes in Syria: After a gunman opened fire at a community college in Oregon killing nine people, President Obama made an impassioned appeal for stronger gun control policy. Despite Obama's plea, Alexis Simendinger of Real Clear Politics says there seems to be no appetite to bring up new gun legislation on Capitol Hill and if any change occurs it'll be a project for the next president. After the announced resignation of House Speaker John Boehner, Republicans on Capitol Hill are preparing to elect a new leader. The likely next-Speaker Kevin McCarthy has come under fire from Democrats after he initially told Fox News that the investigation into the Benghazi attacks and Hillary Clinton's role was politically motivated.

Another government shutdown was avoided after a battle over federal funding for Planned Parenthood heated up. NPR's Susan Davis discusses how the debate will start up again in December. And after meeting with President Obama at the UN General Assembly in New York this week, Russian President Vladimir Putin and his government launched airstrikes in Syria just days later. Despite the assertions of the Kremlin, it appears the attacks are being carried out against anti-Assad forces in the region and not against ISIS. The New York Times' Peter Baker and The Daily Beast's Nancy Youssef discuss how Putin's defense of Assad's government may be an inadvertent defense of his own.

Hillary Clinton faced another congressional committee this week concerning the 2012 Benghazi attacks that killed four Americans. Despite the 11 hour hearing and sometimes pointed exchanges between committee members, Josh Gerstein of Politico says that while the hearing was a setback her email scandal isn't over with a looming FBI investigation coming to the forefront. Vice President Joe Biden announced he will not run for president. His announcement came this week amongst a flurry of speculation about his White House aspirations. Biden cited that despite his family's support he did not believe that there would be enough time to make a viable bid. The Wall Street Journal's Carol Lee says that if Biden had chosen to run he would become the "standard bearer of Obama's legacy." Rep. Paul Ryan announced that he will pursue the House Speaker candidacy. Ryan nailed down key endorsements from conservative groups of leading congressman like the House Freedom Caucus. CNN's Manu Raju explains how despite his constant assertions of not wanting the job Ryan relented by setting forth a string of conditions, one of them being Ryan's desire to see more unity within the GOP. And Molly Ball of The Atlantic discusses Donald Trump's unorthodox campaign for the Republican nomination.

The crumbling, picture-perfect Italian town that's making a comeback: There are just seven year-round residents -- and who knows how many cats -- in the Medieval Italian town of Civita di Bagnoregio, also known as the dying city. The picturesque hilltop town, visited by droves of tourists, is built upon layers of rock and shifting clay, susceptible to weather and natural disaster. Jeffrey Brown reports on efforts to revive and reinforce the city.

Republicans Debate the Economy, Paul Ryan Elected House Speaker & Obama Authorizes Boots on Ground in Syria: Republican presidential candidates debated economic issues in their third matchup of the 2016 election. Jeb Bush and Marco Rubio sparred over Rubio's missed Senate votes. Jeb Bush's performance seems to have worried some of his donors and Jeanne Cummings of The Wall Street Journal says that Bush must improve for the next debate or his campaign doesn't stand a chance in the upcoming election. The debate also took another turn with candidates and even audience members expressing irritation at the CNBC moderators for questions that were viewed as contentious. RNC Chair Reince Priebus, upset with the outcome of the debate, has chosen to suspend the GOP's partnership with NBC for their upcoming debate. John Harwood of CNBC, who moderated the latest debate, says the "anger at the debate is akin to the anger in the House" among Republicans. In Congress, Wisconsin Rep. Paul Ryan, despite his initial hesitation, was elected the 54th Speaker of the House this week. Ryan called for unity and renewal within the GOP party, the week that outgoing Speaker John Boehner helped pass a bipartisan budget deal. Robert Costa of The Washington Post reports on the experience Ryan brings to the job. President Obama announced this week that circumstances have changed and has authorized Special Forces to Syria to assist rebel fighters battling ISIS. Doyle McManus of The Los Angeles Times says that Obama's decision to enter Syria may be an indirect response to Russia's recent occupation within the country.

In Tampa, Florida, in February 2013, a giant hole opened up under the bedroom floor of Jeffrey Bush, swallowing the 36-year-old as he slept. His body was never found. Bush was a victim of a sinkhole – a growing worldwide hazard that lurks wherever limestone and other water-soluble rocks underpin the soil. When carbon dioxide in the air dissolves in rainwater, it forms a weak acid that attacks the soft rocks, riddling them with holes like Swiss cheese. Sinkholes can occur gradually when the surface subsides into bowl-shaped depressions or suddenly, when the ground gives way – often catastrophically. Sinkholes have swallowed highways, apartment buildings, horses, camels, even golfers, with monster-size holes cracking the earth from Siberia to Louisiana. With compelling eyewitness video of dramatic collapses, and following scientists as they explore the underlying forces behind these natural disasters, NOVA travels the globe to investigate what it's like to have your world vanish beneath your feet.

Kidney Donors and Faith Communities: Should organ donors of particular religious traditions be able to specify that their donation go only to co-religionists? Throughout the U.S. there is a dramatic shortage of people willing to give up one of their organs to save a stranger's life. It's a difficult problem for the many patients needing a new kidney, especially among African Americans. One solution, as the Orthodox Jewish charity called Renewal has found, is to connect organ donors with sick patients within their own faith communities, which encourages more people to donate. Leaders of other faith groups, among them African-American churches, are using the Renewal approach in their own communities in order to encourage more organ donations. But what are the ethics of donating organs only within specific communities of faith rather than to anybody?

Oregon Shooting Renews Push For Gun Laws, Republican House Leadership Shakeup and Russian Airstrikes in Syria: After a gunman opened fire at a community college in Oregon killing nine people, President Obama made an impassioned appeal for stronger gun control policy. Despite Obama's plea, Alexis Simendinger of Real Clear Politics says there seems to be no appetite to bring up new gun legislation on Capitol Hill and if any change occurs it'll be a project for the next president. After the announced resignation of House Speaker John Boehner, Republicans on Capitol Hill are preparing to elect a new leader. The likely next-Speaker Kevin McCarthy has come under fire from Democrats after he initially told Fox News that the investigation into the Benghazi attacks and Hillary Clinton's role was politically motivated. Another government shutdown was avoided after a battle over federal funding for Planned Parenthood heated up. NPR's Susan Davis discusses how the debate will start up again in December. And after meeting with President Obama at the UN General Assembly in New York this week, Russian President Vladimir Putin and his government launched airstrikes in Syria just days later. Despite the assertions of the Kremlin, it appears the attacks are being carried out against anti-Assad forces in the region and not against ISIS. Death Penalty and All-White Juries: On November 2, the Supreme Court hears arguments about race and juror selection in a Georgia death penalty case in which an African-American man was tried, convicted, and sentenced to die by an all-white jury. "What the court says about jury selection, and what it says about the reasons that prosecutors have to give for striking people of color from juries, that's going to affect every case from now on," says Stephen Bright, president of the Southern Center for Human Rights, who will argue the plaintiff's case before the court.

Oregon Shooting Renews Push For Gun Laws, Republican House Leadership Shakeup and Russian Airstrikes in Syria: After a gunman opened fire at a community college in Oregon killing nine people, President Obama made an impassioned appeal for stronger gun control policy. Despite Obama's plea, Alexis Simendinger of Real Clear Politics says there seems to be no appetite to bring up new gun legislation on Capitol Hill and if any change occurs it'll be a project for the next president. After the announced resignation of House Speaker John Boehner, Republicans on Capitol Hill are preparing to elect a new leader. The likely next-Speaker Kevin McCarthy has come under fire from Democrats after he initially told Fox News that the investigation into the Benghazi attacks and Hillary Clinton's role was politically motivated. Another government shutdown was avoided after a battle over federal funding for Planned Parenthood heated up. NPR's Susan Davis discusses how the debate will start up again in December. And after meeting with President Obama at the UN General Assembly in New York this week, Russian President Vladimir Putin and his government launched airstrikes in Syria just days later. Despite the assertions of the Kremlin, it appears the attacks are being carried out against anti-Assad forces in the region and not against ISIS. The New York Times' Peter Baker and The Daily Beast's Nancy Youssef discuss how Putin's defense of Assad's government may be an inadvertent defense of his own.

Chaos erupted in the House Republican conference this week after Majority Leader Kevin McCarthy decided to end his bid to replace outgoing Speaker John Boehner. The vote was postponed at the GOP looked for a candidate who could garner support from the establishment and the Party's right flank. Party leaders openly courted Wisconsin Rep. Paul Ryan, who has said multiple times he doesn't want the job. Morning Consult's Reid Wilson reports on the scramble in the House. Plus, Democratic presidential candidate Hillary Clinton announced her opposition to the Pacific trade agreement pushed by her former boss President Obama. The Washington Post's Anne Gearan reports on Clinton's efforts to distance herself from Obama. And Politico's Michael Crowley reports on the Pentagon's decision to end a program that trained Syrian rebels to fight ISIS. The $500 million dollar program trained only a handful of recruits. At the same time, Russia is amplifying its presence in Syria. Meanwhile, the Supreme Court returns for the new term with cases on issues ranging from affirmative action to voting rights. Joan Biskupic of Reuters discusses whether the more liberal wins of the SCOTUS' last session were an irregularity or a pattern set to stick around.

More than 2,000 years ago, the thriving city of Petra rose up in the bone-dry desert of what is now Jordan. An oasis of culture and abundance, the city was built by wealthy merchants who carved spectacular temple-tombs into its cliffs, raised a monumental Great Temple and devised an ingenious system that channeled water to vineyards, bathhouses, fountains and pools. But following a catastrophic earthquake and a slump in its desert trade routes, Petra's unique culture faded and was lost to most of the world for nearly 1,000 years. Now, in a daring experiment, an archaeologist and sculptors team up to carve an iconic temple-tomb to find out how the ancient people of Petra built their city of stone.

In Tampa, Florida, in February 2013, a giant hole opened up under the bedroom floor of Jeffrey Bush, swallowing the 36-year-old as he slept. His body was never found. Bush was a victim of a sinkhole – a growing worldwide hazard that lurks wherever limestone and other water-soluble rocks underpin the soil. When carbon dioxide in the air dissolves in rainwater, it forms a weak acid that attacks the soft rocks, riddling them with holes like Swiss cheese. Sinkholes can occur gradually when the surface subsides into bowl-shaped depressions or suddenly, when the ground gives way – often catastrophically. Sinkholes have swallowed highways, apartment buildings, horses, camels, even golfers, with monster-size holes cracking the earth from Siberia to Louisiana. With compelling eyewitness video of dramatic collapses, and following scientists as they explore the underlying forces behind these natural disasters, NOVA travels the globe to investigate what it's like to have your world vanish beneath your feet.

Oregon Shooting Renews Push For Gun Laws, Republican House Leadership Shakeup and Russian Airstrikes in Syria: After a gunman opened fire at a community college in Oregon killing nine people, President Obama made an impassioned appeal for stronger gun control policy. Despite Obama's plea, Alexis Simendinger of Real Clear Politics says there seems to be no appetite to bring up new gun legislation on Capitol Hill and if any change occurs it'll be a project for the next president. After the announced resignation of House Speaker John Boehner, Republicans on Capitol Hill are preparing to elect a new leader. The likely next-Speaker Kevin McCarthy has come under fire from Democrats after he initially told Fox News that the investigation into the Benghazi attacks and Hillary Clinton's role was politically motivated. Another government shutdown was avoided after a battle over federal funding for Planned Parenthood heated up. NPR's Susan Davis discusses how the debate will start up again in December. And after meeting with President Obama at the UN General Assembly in New York this week, Russian President Vladimir Putin and his government launched airstrikes in Syria just days later. Despite the assertions of the Kremlin, it appears the attacks are being carried out against anti-Assad forces in the region and not against ISIS. The New York Times' Peter Baker and The Daily Beast's Nancy Youssef discuss how Putin's defense of Assad's government may be an inadvertent defense of his own.

Chaos erupted in the House Republican conference this week after Majority Leader Kevin McCarthy decided to end his bid to replace outgoing Speaker John Boehner. The vote was postponed at the GOP looked for a candidate who could garner support from the establishment and the Party's right flank. Party leaders openly courted Wisconsin Rep. Paul Ryan, who has said multiple times he doesn't want the job. Morning Consult's Reid Wilson reports on the scramble in the House. Plus, Democratic presidential candidate Hillary Clinton announced her opposition to the Pacific trade agreement pushed by her former boss President Obama. The Washington Post's Anne Gearan reports on Clinton's efforts to distance herself from Obama. And Politico's Michael Crowley reports on the Pentagon's decision to end a program that trained only a handful of recruits. At the same time, Russia is amplifying its presence in Syria. Meanwhile, the Supreme Court returns for the new term with cases on issues ranging from affirmative action to voting rights. Joan Biskupic of Reuters discusses whether the more liberal wins of the SCOTUS' last session were an irregularity or a pattern set to stick around.

Democrats Spar in First Debate, Obama Slows Afghan Troop Withdrawal and 2016 Fundraising Reports: The five Democratic White House hopefuls squared off in their Party's first debate of the 2016 Election with issues ranging from gun control, foreign policy and Hillary Clinton's State Department emails. Dan Balz of The Washington Post says that despite Clinton's strong showing at the debate, Joe Biden continues to weigh a 2016 run. President Obama announced this week his decision to delay the withdrawal of U.S. troops from Afghanistan which will push American occupation within the country well into 2016. Alexis Simendinger of Real Clear Politics speaks on the "disappointment" Obama could feel at having to hand off Afghanistan and Iraq to his successor. And the third quarter presidential fundraising reports show Hillary Clinton and Bernie Sanders standing atop the field with more cash on hand than the entire Republican field.

Hillary Clinton faced another congressional committee this week concerning the 2012 Benghazi attacks that killed four Americans. Despite the 11 hour hearing and sometimes pointed exchanges between committee members, Josh Gerstein of Politico says that while the hearing was a setback her email scandal isn't over with a looming FBI investigation coming to the forefront. Vice President Joe Biden announced he will not run for president. His announcement came this week amongst a flurry of speculation about his White House aspirations. Biden cited that despite his family's support he did not believe that there would be enough time to make a viable bid. The Wall Street Journal's Carol Lee says that if Biden had chosen to run he would become the "standard bearer of Obama's legacy." Rep. Paul Ryan announced that he will pursue the House Speaker candidacy. Ryan nailed down key endorsements from conservative groups of leading congressman like the House Freedom Caucus. CNN's Manu Raju explains how despite his constant assertions of not wanting the job Ryan relented by setting forth a string of conditions, one of them being Ryan's desire to see more unity within the GOP. And Molly Ball of The Atlantic discusses Donald Trump's unorthodox campaign for the Republican nomination.

Republicans Debate the Economy, Paul Ryan Elected House Speaker & Obama Authorizes Boots on Ground in Syria: Republican presidential candidates debated economic issues in their third matchup of the 2016 election. Jeb Bush and Marco Rubio sparred over Rubio's missed Senate votes. Jeb Bush's performance seems to have worried some of his donors and Jeanne Cummings of The Wall Street Journal says that Bush must improve for the next debate or his campaign doesn't stand a chance in the upcoming election. The debate also took another turn with candidates and even audience members expressing irritation at the CNBC moderators for questions that were viewed as contentious. RNC Chair Reince Priebus, upset with the outcome of the debate, has chosen to suspend the GOP's partnership with NBC for their upcoming debate. John Harwood of CNBC, who moderated the latest debate, says the "anger at the debate is akin to the anger in the House" among Republicans. In Congress, Wisconsin Rep. Paul Ryan, despite his initial hesitation, was elected the 54th Speaker of the House this week. Ryan called for unity and renewal within the GOP party, the week that outgoing Speaker John Boehner helped pass a bipartisan budget deal. Robert Costa of The Washington Post reports on the experience Ryan brings to the job. President Obama announced this week that circumstances have changed and has authorized Special Forces to Syria to assist rebel fighters battling ISIS. Doyle McManus of The Los Angeles Times says that Obama's decision to enter Syria may be an indirect response to Russia's recent occupation within the country.

Parliament of the World's Religions: The 2015 Parliament of the World's Religions, the oldest and largest interfaith gathering in the world, was held October 15-19th in Salt Lake City. Some 10,000 participants from 50 spiritual traditions participated. The event was first held in Chicago in 1893. This year's gathering focused on peace, climate change, and women in leadership. Imam Malik Mujahid, who chairs the Parliament's board of trustees, described the event and why he believes it is important for people of faith to gather in solidarity and believe in "the humanity of the other."

Oregon Shooting Renews Push For Gun Laws, Republican House Leadership Shakeup and Russian Airstrikes in Syria: After a gunman opened fire at a community college in Oregon killing nine people, President Obama made an impassioned appeal for stronger gun control policy. Despite Obama's plea, Alexis Simendinger of Real Clear Politics says there seems to be no appetite to bring up new gun legislation on Capitol Hill and if any change occurs it'll be a project for the next president. After the announced resignation of House Speaker John Boehner, Republicans on Capitol Hill are preparing to elect a new leader. The likely next-Speaker Kevin McCarthy has come under fire from Democrats after he initially told Fox News that the investigation into the Benghazi attacks and Hillary Clinton's role was politically motivated. Another government shutdown was avoided after a battle over federal funding for Planned Parenthood heated up. NPR's Susan Davis discusses how the debate will start up again in December. And after meeting with President Obama at the UN General Assembly in New York this week, Russian President Vladimir Putin and his government launched airstrikes in Syria just days later. Despite the assertions of the Kremlin, it appears the attacks are being carried out against anti-Assad forces in the region and not against ISIS. The New York Times' Peter Baker and The Daily Beast's Nancy Youssef discuss how Putin's defense of Assad's government may be an inadvertent defense of his own.

Is kindergarten too young to suspend a student? At the largest charter school network in New York City, strict academic and behavior standards set the stage for learning. That doesn't exclude children as young as 5 or 6 years old, who can be given out-of-school suspensions if they don't follow the rules. Special correspondent for education John Merrow explores what that policy means for both the child and the school.
