Transportation	NBC 5 News	6/30/2023	11:00 a.m.	1:45	What a difference a few hours can make. The scene of the long line at the airport just at 5am is a far cry from now. That speaks to the ebb and flow of airport traffic all across the country. Part of what will contribute to the estimated record crowds in the skies is the fact that the 4th of July falls on Tuesday. So, many people may be taking some extended time off to make it a long weekend or maybe even longer. The previous record for air travel around Independence Day was in 2019, the last summer before the pandemic hit. The TSA, the Transportation Security Administration, officially considers the 4th of July holiday period between yesterday and June 29th and of all those days, the single busiest day for air travel is predicted to be today
