Affect of closures on their businesses in the Desert, challenges of small business in the Desert which is increasingly filled with large chains and franchises better able to withstand closures or downturn; issue with retail and other employees working in ever-changing Covid environments.

Show 47. Authors of True Child Art (a non-profit Desert based organization) return to discuss the dramatic loss of self-expression by children due to the now ubiquitous use of copying – also called guided drawing – which children must follow in the classroom. Discussions include grading elementary student art, the importance of art to many children who may not always express themselves in verbal (spoken or written) ways. A contrast is drawn between the results of True Child Art where children learn basic art skills and then create art from their own imagination and observation and that taught in many places throughout the United States. The authors focus on the elementary art program in Orange County CA and Fairfax County VA where thousands of virtually identical “art works” are created by children as opposed to the original works created by children under the True Child Art program.

Show 48. Water Issues Part I. Local water officials and local area residents discuss continuing water conservation issues imposed despite the unusual rain fall received in the Desert in the 2022 – 2023 time period.

Show 49 Water Issues Part II. A local environmental advocate and hydrologist discusses depletion of the ancient aquifer deep beneath the Desert in order to water the hundreds of golf courses in the Desert. A manager of one of the largest golf courses in the area responds as to how they conserve this resource.

Show 50. Author of True Child Art (a non-profit Desert based organization) returns to teach parents and teachers fundamental art skills so that they may pass these lessons on to children. Viewers learned to mix paint using the modern optimal primary colors of cyan, magenta and yellow instead of red, yellow and blue. Using these skills children learn to create artworks from their own imagination and observation rather than copying works of adults. The loss of creativity is being mandated from Washington D.C. and state capitals like Sacramento according to the author. Life long government bureaucrats who have never taught art in the classroom want art to be reduced to rote coloring book style lessons that can be graded and the data even sold. The author suggests that this takes place at all levels and she does not intend to pick on bureaucrats at the Department of Education. The host assured her that lack of practical experience is rampant at most federal agencies and a great example is the FCC where many, if not most, regulators, both staff and commissioners, have never worked at or had practical experience at a radio or television station and have no practical ideas about the industry they attempt to regulate.
