7/1/23

- Taking an epic road trip across America. A correspondent takes a road trip through the middle of the country, asking people how they see their place in America, getting a sense of how people see the nation's challenges, the ups and downs of working, raising a family, paying the bills, and how to move the country forward.

7/8/23

- The youngest black mayor ever in the U.S. At age 18, his mission is to save his hometown. Now, the teen is in charge of a rural town with a tough past and a not-so-bright future.
- Results are in for the 4-day work week experiment. A researcher behind the first-of-its-kind study gives an update. Can this study change the way Americans work around the clock?
- Cars, wildfires, and power plants. How our air is filled with pollution and how a satellite could help everyone breathe a little easier.

7/15/23

- The repeal of Roe v. Wade is changing life in cities and towns across America. Now, women seeking abortion services are forced to travel across state lines in search of care.
- Women stuck under the weight of growing debt. They need more education to get the same jobs as men, and often, they're making less money than men in the same position.
- A story about labor in America being written on the picket line and not in a writer's room. What's at stake as film and television writers strike?

7/22/23

- A veteran returns home, bringing with him the burdens of war. How a new crisis lifeline can prevent the unthinkable, with veterans and active military dying by suicide at a rate of 22 a day.
- Medical schools are wondering how they'll train future OBGYN's in states where abortion is banned. How the U.S. Supreme Court's decision to overturn Roe v. Wade could change the practice of medicine for generations to come.
- Cities across America declaring homelessness a state of emergency. Looking for ways to move the unhoused out of tent cities, and the best solutions for helping unsheltered people living in public spaces.

- Families working the waters off the coast of Maine are facing a tradeoff they can't accept. How a plan to harness offshore wind power stirs up controversy, and the effort to reverse climate change is putting the environment, the economy, and a tight-knit community in a battle for the future.

- A professional baseball player turned farmer. Why he says working the land and owning your home are keys to growing stronger communities.
- A major city wants to tax drivers to cut traffic congestion. Why people in the Bronx are afraid this could only make things worse.

8/5/23

- America's seniors are looking for help to stay in their homes. The shortage of health care workers, and how the support system is failing those working in the home-care industry and the people who rely on them.
- Doing your taxes might get easier. Exploring the IRS's new program to modernize how you file your taxes.
- An all-too-familiar story for small towns in America: businesses and factories close and the people leave. How a hometown hero returned to rebuild the place that gave him his start.

- Hackers vs. machines. A convention in Las Vegas where hackers test the security of A.I. for eight corporations to determine what this means for the future of Artificial Intelligence.
- The nation's fire departments are stretched to the limit. The calls for help never stop and short-staffed fire departments can't keep up. Now, one Florida fire department is getting creative to attract the next generation of firefighters.
- A rocket scientist is working on NASA's next trip around the moon. How one woman is creating more diversity in the aerospace industry and what she's doing to fuel more opportunities.

- The greatest contradiction for the United States is the institution of slavery. The calls for compensation to descendants of slaves' families, the proposals now in congress, and how to put a price on more than one-hundred-fifty years of continued and systemic injustice.
- A new dominant Covid variant in the U.S. Hear from a former CDC official about life with Covid in a post-pandemic world, and what we know about this new strain.
- Families without cell phones or computers. How a dedicated team is changing lives one computer at a time and helping families cross the digital divide.

8/26/23

- A demand for change came in 2020, with companies making promises to improve diversity. Now, layoffs are including a DEI downsize. Why diversity, equity, and inclusion are key to a successful company.
- Expectant mothers facing a rising mortality rate. With black women most at risk, a new program is trying to improve pregnancy care and close that gap.
- Dating app fatigue. Apps make finding love easier, but is online dating overwhelming our circuits? What neuroscience tells us about finding love on the internet.

9/9/23

- The economic toll from our climate crisis is growing. With more destructive storms each year, homeowners are now facing increasingly steep insurance premiums. How residents are trying to keep up with the high cost of being insured.
- Taking a gamble on on-line sports betting. Why sports books are so interested in getting younger people to download their app and the concerns that this can lead to addiction.
- Architecture that stays cool despite triple-digit temperatures. In a summer with record high temperatures, there's a growing movement for self-cooling homes and businesses. A pilot project in Houston replicates a centuries-old construction method that relies on nature for climate control.

9/17/23

- America's veterans are carrying the invisible wounds of war. Thousands are crossing the border, seeking psychedelic therapy as a way to heal. Why so many say their lives are being restored by a therapy they can't get on our soil.
- Political cartoonist Christopher Weyant on the line he draws between what's funny and what's not in an election year.

9/24/23

- Americans are striking at rates not seen in nearly a quarter century. Could this current labor movement be a turning point for how we all work?
- The state of Oregon now allows people to legally use "magic" mushrooms in supervised care. Proponents say it could revolutionize mental health treatment, but others—including those researching it—have concerns.
- A stunning wildlife refuge in Georgia sits on property seized from a community of black landowners decades ago. Now, their descendants want it back.
