Slug: BORDER SEC

And on Capitol Hill tonight President Trump says he will likely close the entire southern border and cutoff aid to three countries in Central America but some members of the President's administration warn the move could backfire. Reporter lana Zak brings us up to speed on the controversy. In response to a surge of migrants from Central America, President Trump says he is cutting off economic aid to El Salvador, Honduras and Guatemala. The President is also threatening to close the entire US-Mexico border, which critics say would not stop migrants, who would move to more remote crossings, but would stop legal trade. ABC's Matt Gutman is at the border. Antonio Martinez, who works legally in the US, explains that people without documents don't bother to cross here, and he says the impulse to close the border "doesn't resolve anything." Economists and immigration experts are concerned these moves will backfire, especially cutting off foreign aid, likely to cause deteriorating conditions in those countries, pushing more people to seek better lives here. But the President's Chief of Staff, Mick Mulvaney, insists the President intends to follow through with his threats, and today Department of Homeland Security has issued emergency operation orders at the southern border.

Slug: PARKING

Also downtown, city officials are looking to expand the boundaries of the parking district following the opening of the new ramp on 3rd and Vine Street. The change approved today by the Board of Public Works would require some downtown business located near the ramp to pay additional property taxes on the theory that their customers would use the ramp. Some business owners oppose the parking district expansion. The plan needs approval from the Common Council.

Slug: CENTER

Tonight's proposal is cheaper than the original plan and does not call for encroachment into Riverside Park. Last summer the City Council approved a proposal to expand and renovate the La Crosse Center but it was vetoed by the Mayor due to its cost and design and the Center board went back to the drawing board. Tonight the Finance and Personnel Committee gave its okay the renovation proposal next goes before the full City Council for a vote next Tuesday. Based on tonight's vote it would appear headed for approval and the Mayor this time is in full support.

Slug: OWI

Another set of bills to strengthen OWI laws is under consideration at the state capitol. One would provide a stiffer penalty if you commit a 5th or 6th OWI, another would make a first offense a misdemeanor. Today lawmakers heard from dozens of family members who've lost a loved one due to drunk driving. Bills up this year would make a first OWI offense a misdemeanor and if a person doesn't re-offend they'll have a chance to whip it off their record. These bills have bipartisan support but as chairman of the committee says most don't pass in the Senate. Majority Leader of the Senate Scott Fitzgerald said he rather find treatment alternatives or place people through a diversion court instead of placing drunk driving offenders in prison or placing monetary penalties on them.

Slug: FLOODING BALDWIN

Senator Tammy Baldwin hosted a forum today to hear ideas about what is needed to protect against future flooding. The Mississippi River crested just yesterday at two and a half feet above flood stage and is slowly on its way down but people want a permanent solution. The main discussion today focused on investing in resilient infrastructure; in other words building flood-safe roads, buildings and bridges. Many on hand today said patching flood damaged buildings that will flood again is not the right solution. The current US infrastructure bill expires next year and according to Baldwin that's when Congress has the chance to act and make real long term changes.

Slug: PUBLIC WORKS

Today the Board of Public Works discussed how to improve the safety for pedestrians trying to cross South Avenue around areas like 14th, 15th, and 16th Street. The board hopes to have rapid flashing beacon lights installed this summer at 13th and 15th Streets at 16th Street. The board is looking to create a more visible painted cross walk as well as having speed indicator signs there. Mayor Tim Kabat says the biggest challenge at 16th and 17th is that the right away is narrow and does not have enough room to install a median island on South Avenue. Mayor Kabat says it will take staff 3-4 weeks to put together the survey work to measure everything before they can come back to the board with the cost estimates. After that it is a matter of legislation to go through the council to find the money to fund the South Avenue project.

Slug: REFUND

Right now we're also learning more about the returns received this year. So far tonight the IRS says it's sent out more than 206 billion dollars in refunds as of March 29th. That's down nearly three percent from the same time last year. Total processed returns are also down. Experts say the drop was expected because it's the first year people are filing with changes made by President Trump's 2017 tax law. Again, the tax return deadline is April 15th, just six days from now.

The 15th Annual State of the Tribes address wrapped up not too long ago. Oneida Nation's chairman spoke to the Wisconsin legislature in Madison. Hill also asked the state to eliminate the use of Indian mascots, nicknames and logos. According to Hill just last month 31 public Wisconsin schools still use them. He says they encourage racism and hatred and don't accurately represent the Native American culture.

Slug: HOUSING STUDY

A city wide effort is taking place to tackle housing challenges for some of the city's most vulnerable. A fair housing report was presented earlier today at La Crosse City Hall in an effort to improve housing choices for residents in La Crosse and surrounding areas. The report identified eight different challenges for those seeking housing along with recommendations on how to improve the overall situation. Gregerson also said the report found that in order to support a one bedroom apartment in La Crosse you would have to make at least eleven dollars an hour. The report will be presented again this Thursday during the Judiciary and Administration Committee meeting at 5:15 in City Hall. A new bill could make growing hemp easier for Wisconsin's farmers. Today lawmakers discussed "The Growing Opportunities Act" which was recently introduced to the legislature. The bill changes current law so it's consistent with the 2018 federal Farm Bill. Republicans behind the bill say it will give Wisconsin a completive edge against the international hemp industry. The bill also excludes THC in hemp from the list of restricted controlled substances.

Slug: LAX CENTER

The vote came a short time ago at City Hall. Members voted to approve the 42 million dollar plan with supporters saying it was long overdue and is vital to helping La Crosse compete with other cities for conventions and trade shows. Last summer the La Crosse City Council approved a 49 million dollar proposal to renovate and expand the center but Mayor Kabat vetoed it due to its cost and design that called for the expansion to extend into Riverside Park. The center board made adjustments and came back with a slightly scaled down plan. It was unanimous and this time Mayor Kabat is fully on board. Analysts say the investment in the expansion will pay off for the city with a nearly nine million dollar annual economic impact. The city must still work out details on financing with a decision expected next month.

Slug: EVERS

Governor Evers said today he wants to renegotiate the state's agreement with Foxconn because he doesn't believe the company will ever fulfill its promise to create 13,000 new jobs. Foxconn's current deal with the state includes more than 4 billion dollars in tax incentives if it employs 13,000 people as originally promised and invests 10 billion in the state. Evers says he wants to make sure taxpayers are protected. In a statement, Senate Majority Leader Scott Fitzgerald said in part "if the state is willing to take back its commitment and open up a contract without both sides. How do we guarantee Wisconsin to make any other company want to expand here?" Foxconn did not immediately respond to request for a comment.

Slug: MUELLER

We're going straight to Capitol Hill for our updates tonight. ABC's Marci Gonzalez is standing by with her report. Special Counsel Robert Mueller's report was finally released today, detailing the results of a wide-ranging 22-month long investigation and finding no evidence of a criminal conspiracy between the President or members of his campaign and Russian meddling in the 2016 presidential election. The issue of obstruction of justice is a bit more complicated the report highlighting 11 instances of potential obstruction, finding that the investigation was allowed to run its course despite President Trump's repeated efforts to interfere. Listing multiple instances in which he directed White House Counsel Don McGahn to fire the Special Counsel. The report found the President's efforts were "mostly unsuccessful but that is largely because the persons who surround the President declined to carry out his orders", Mueller ultimately reaching no conclusion on obstruction of justice, noting, "if we had confidence after a thorough investigation of the facts that the President clearly did not commit obstruction of justice, we would so state." The report shows upon initially learning of the Special Counsel investigation the President stated: "This is terrible. This is the end of my presidency. I'm *expletive." Today though, a much different tone; the President maintained his claims of vindication. But Democrats say this is far from case closed and they're now calling on Mueller to testify here on Capitol Hill within the next month.

Representative Melissa Sargent and other supporters say this would not only bring money into the state, but they argue it would improve people's lives by giving them certain medical benefits or providing jobs. However, Republicans say they don't support it. Sargent says it's not about what the Republican leadership wants. A Marquette Law School poll from last week shows a majority of voters in Wisconsin are for full legalization.

Slug: LEAF PICK UP

Problems with leaf collection last fall in La Crosse have the city taking another look at a possible better way. The Board of Public Works took another look at La Crosse's leaf collection program today. Leaf collection was cut short last fall due to conflicting street projects and snowfall. Those that would normally be picking up the leaves had to go plow snow and the city didn't have enough staff to get all the leaves picked up before the snow hit. This year with increasing costs and staffing issues city officials fear they may come across the same problems come fall. The City of La Crosse spent over $270,000 collecting leaves in 2018; that's more than $50,000 than 2017. For now departments are going to reassess their budgets and come back next week to try and figure out a plan for this fall.

He had been on administrative leave since the arrest but returned to work last Friday after signing the agreement to accept the five day suspension. A reassessment of property values in La Crosse has some homeowners concerned about higher property taxes but the city says the impact on most taxes should be minimal. State regulations require cities to do periodic reassessments every five years. La Crosse's last property re-evaluation came in 2008. The city sent notices to homeowners informing them that the reassessments will increase property values between 25 and fifty percent. But City Planner Jason Gilman says tax rate changes will minimize the impact on tax bills. Gilman says there are some common misconceptions among homeowners. Governor Evers today signed his first bill into law as Governor. It bans the term mental retardation from state agency rules and regulations. The word has come to be known as the "R" word and has become offensive and disrespectful to those with mental challenges. Evers vetoed a bill in February and the legislature has only passed three other measures that await action by the Governor.

Slua: WINONA JAIL

The Minnesota Department of Corrections has told Winona County the jail must close in October of 2021 due to code violations. The county has spent the past 14 months discussing its options; all of them bring added expense. News 19's Jeremy Culver tells you where things stand for a new jail? All those in attendance agreed that a new jail was necessary for the county. The problem centered around how big the jail should be and in turn the costs associated with it. A deadline is nearing for Winona County to build a new jail. Regardless of their decision come October of 2021 the current jail will close. That means long hallways and no longer viable for housing the inmates. The Jail Advisory Committee determined building a new jail would be best for the county, but what size is the concern. The initial discussion centered around having 86 to 100 designated beds for the jail. However some commissioners believe that's assuming too much on the jail population increasing. However others feel you have to plan for peak numbers and studies show the jail population will grow. While an actual cost isn't set yet it's anticipated it could cost 22 million or less if the beds drop. But the urgency to get the jail done depends on the member you talk to. Now there was no official action taken at today's meeting as it was designed just for further discussions. The one thing that did come out of today's meeting though is the architecture firm, BKV Group, will come back with options and costs for both increasing bed capacity as well as option and costs for a smaller jail. The other item of unanimous agreement for the members is that a new jail should have the capability to hold an inmate for 1 year longer sentences would be served in state prisons.

The facts are part of the 2018 community report released by Fire Chief Ken Gilliam. It shows that of the nearly 6,700 incidents reported to the fire department almost 5,000 were for rescue or emergency medical service. In fact there were more false alarms received than actual fires; 439 false alarms compared to 140 fires. Most importantly there were no civilian fire deaths or casualties in 2018. Assistant Fire Chief Jeff murphy says another important finding is that nearly 95 percent of actual fires were confined to the room of origin and did not spread. Murphy says having enough fire stations to serve the city gets the credit. Murphy says the department also added some equipment last year; a new fire engine for Station Number Four and a new fire boat for Station Number Two.

Gauquie says he isn't encroaching on downtown restaurant's business because the product he sells isn't similar. Some existing restaurant owners and food truck owners don't want to discourage competition but agree that the regulations need some clarification there are different outcomes possible. It's not just educational funding that separates Democrats and Republicans. The two sides can't agree on a funding plan to pay for road repairs and maintenance but some emergency responders say Wisconsin's bumpy roads are making it harder for them to do their jobs. As Capital Bureau Chief Emily Fannon tells you at the state capitol today they told lawmakers that funding transportation can save lives. Most of us have experienced these road conditions (driving over pothole) but imagine if an ambulance or a fire truck runs over a pot hole and gets a flat t these are the situations in which emergency responders say they're working. State lawmakers are deliberating how to generate more revenue to fix roads; some ideas are: raising the gas tax, or increasing license and registration fees for vehicles. Right now, Republicans and Democrats can't agree how to generate additional road funding. They say the longer it takes to find a solution the worse the problem will get. UW La Crosse Chancellor Joe Gow said today he's disappointed by the decision from the Joint Finance Committee to remove funding for Phase Two of the new science center on campus. The Republican controlled committee approved all but 615 million dollars of Governor Evers budget proposal but cut the 83 million dollars for the second phase of the Science Center. Phase One is already complete. Also cut, upgrades to two UWL dormitories including fire and smoke alarm systems. But Gow is most concerned about the Science Center saying the UWL needs it to meet the needs of students. Gow says there's a slim chance funding could be restored this budget cycle but expects a more realistic expectation is to get the project approved for funding in the 2021 budget.

A resolution goes before the County Board of Supervisors this week for a vote. Currently Amtrak makes two stops a day in La Crosse, one coming east, one coming west. That train can hold 375 people. Amtrak says the ride from St. Paul to Chicago is one of the busiest routes. The La Crosse County Board is supporting the expansion of Amtrak services along what's called the Hiawatha Route with service between Milwaukee and Chicago and the Empire Builder Route from Milwaukee through Tomah and La Crosse and Winona and eventually to the Twin Cities and Seattle. The expansion would add one daily train in each direction. The full county board will vote on the resolution this Thursday. The Legislature's Budget Committee included $35 million in their transportation budget to expand rail service between Milwaukee and Chicago.

Hemp and CBD are still creating a gray area for some businesses. Conflicting federal and state laws are making some reconsider their involvement in the industry. We've reported on financial institutions dropping customers who deal in the products because of their confusion over hemp legality but now lawyers are stepping up to provide clarity to their clients, how CBD products should be labeled, sold and purchased. The State Bar of Wisconsin held an informational conference for law firms across Wisconsin, one focus concerns labeling CBD products and the health claims some products make, like curing cancer. Those who spoke at the event said with CBD products popping up everywhere not everyone can legally sell it. They must have a license and if not they could face up to $200 in fines. Also there is no universal label on CBD products that tell consumers these products are safe or legal. Lawyers also got insight on how manufacturers should be licensed and how hemp crops have to reach a certain threshold to contain less than .03 percent THC. Congress is also exploring ways to regulate hemp and CBD. A House Appropriations Committee met yesterday to address concerns over unregulated CBD products and the safety of using them.

The Supreme Court ruled on an Indiana law related to abortion and a case about transgender rights from Pennsylvania. ABC's Trevor Ault tells us what these rulings mean. The Supreme Court waded into the cultural divide Tuesday. First; abortion, where following several recent state-level restrictionstoday the court reached different conclusions over a pair of 2016 Indiana laws signed by then-Governor Mike Pence. The court let stand a ruling which struck down one of the laws which had banned abortion on the basis of sex, race or disability though Justice Clarence Thomas wrote the court will soon have to examine the scope of the constitutional right to an abortion and how far that right goes. Today the justices also voted 7-2 to allow a different Indiana law, this one requiring fetal remains be buried or cremated after an abortion is performed, the court saying it doesn't create an undue burden for women trying to have the procedure. The ACLU was among those who challenged the law after the ruling, Reproductive Freedom Project Director Jennifer Dalven released a statement, saying in part: "While this ruling is limited, the law is part of a larger trend of state laws designed to stigmatize and drive abortion care out of reach." The Supreme Court also blocked a challenge to a Pennsylvania School District policy allowing transgender students to use bathrooms and locker rooms that match their gender identity. The rule had been challenged by a group of students represented by a Christian advocacy group. Today the justices declined to take up the case, giving a legal victory to transgender students, at least for now. There are many more state level abortion levs that are likely headed to the Supreme Court. Today the ACLU began pursuing a referendum in Missouri; they want to repeal a new 8-week abortion ban-by putting the issue on the ballot.

In a 2016 trial a jury found that "Stairway" did not significantly resemble the song "Taurus" written by the late Randy Wolfe and performed by his band spirit. Zeppelin guitarist Jimmy Page said he wrote the music and vocalist Robert Plant the lyrics and that both were original. But in September a three-judge panel from the 9th Circuit ruled that the trial judge failed to advise the jury properly and ordered a new trial. Right now a potential jail sentence for manslaughter while intoxicated is set at a minimum of four years. This bill along with making it mandatory to appear in court for a first drunk driving offense passed unanimously, both bills will now head to the Senate. As the Dairy State, Wisconsin is suffering more than most with the crisis in the dairy industry; Wisconsin lost about 7% of its dairy farms in 2018. That works out to 638 fewer farms compared with 2017 and it represents the biggest drop since 2004. The first year the USDA began keeping records. The problem is an oversupply of milk and a shrinking demand. In 2018 the average American consumed 18 gallons of milk a year, down from 30 pounds in the 1970s'. Part of that drop is due to milk alternatives and the position of some nutritionists who question the health benefits of milk.

Tonight, banks from across the state are getting their questions about industrial hemp answered. The plant is mostly used for clothing, fuel and CBD oil and the industry is growing in Wisconsin. The Wisconsin Bankers Association says financial institutions aren't sure whether it's legal. Capitol Bureau Chief Emilee Fannon reports on the push to clear up the confusion. Wisconsin is in the middle of a pilot program to research industrial hemp. Wisconsin allows financial institutions to accept customers that grow, sell or produce hemp. But banks currently don't have clarity from the state or federal regulators how to treat these customers. So the Wisconsin Bankers Association hosted a panel to clear up some of those concerns. It gives one-time licenses to grow industrial hemp and process it into products like CBD oil. Members on the panel are asking banks to use their best judgment to accept a customer or not. Last year a poll by the Wisconsin Bankers Association showed 17% of its members were interested in accepting hemp customers. Since then the number continues to grow. Senator Testin is working on legislation to find a framework for bankers to use when accepting a hemp customer. He also is considering whether retailers who sell CBD products should have licenses as well to show banks their business is legal.

It's also hurting local agri-tourism in Trempealeau. The constant rain is too much for grapes at Elmaro Vineyard. Heavy rain can drown the plants and knock out future grapes as blooming season arrives. If they lose too many berries the yield decreases and they're forced to get their crop elsewhere, a problem facing several farmers in Western Wisconsin. News 19's Marcus Aarsvold attended the latest meeting of the recently formed group today and Marcus, the group has some new funding to help with their effort. That's right Scott. The Alliance to Heal fights the opioid problem here in our area and with the help of two grants they're hoping to make more progress. One grant is from the Wisconsin Department of Justice; it assess' previous drug related deaths, funding research into their causes and how interventions could've helped. The other, from State Health Services, funds awareness efforts like billboards and broadcast ads. The research grant is $24,000 and that awareness grant is $41,000. That will benefit both La Crosse and Crawford counties. But grant money aside the Alliance to Heal says the important takeaway is realizing just how quickly and addictive opioid drugs can be and using that education to stop the problem. It's time again to introduce you to our Jefferson Award winner. He's a retired teacher who's continuing that role in a different way. News 19's Dave Solie is here to explain that story. Mike Brown is the president of an all-volunteer group designed to help children learn more about outdoor activities, and they provide a lot of mentoring along the way. When school's in session this is a common scene but this is a Saturday in the summer and still the halls are filled. The reason, a day full of activities for children sponsored by a group called kids and mentors outdoors, or KAMO. Mike Brown is a retired teacher. Now he's president of the Coulee KAMO Group. After inviting himself to a meeting and after listening for a while he thought he could make it work in La Crosse. KAMO is a non-profit volunteer organization helping children expand their perspective and in this case helping Houston County Social Services. Children have fun and learn more about the outdoors. But quite often, Mike says the group makes a difference in another even more important way. So even though he retired Mike is still teaching and he wouldn't have it any other way. It requires a lot of work to organize these activities. So Mike says they're always looking for good volunteers who share their passion for the outdoors and contributing to others. You can learn more by going to kamokids.org/map/coulee-chapter. The mentors do all the planning, coordinating and financing of these activities all year. Did you know that Wisconsin ranks fifth in North America for maple syrup production? In this segment of Know Your Wisconsin Andrea Albers takes us to Anderson's Maple Syrup in Cumberland. Maple forests are only found in the northeast quarter of North America. Maple trees only thrive in a specific region from New England to Minnesota and the Canadian provinces that border those states. Anderson's Maple Syrup was established in 1928 and its products are in grocery stores around the country. The best part about this third generation company is that it's made right here in northern Wisconsin! One reason this syrup is so popular is the company's commitment to quality. If maple syrup is stored for more than 48 hours it starts to spoil. So they boil it into syrup as soon as it's gathered from the tree. Prior to sale it goes through one final process! In Wisconsin, March is a prime month for tapping sugar maple trees, when the sap is sweetest. Generally the maple syrup is harvested and made within a short three-month window from February to April. And Anderson's strive to make sure every bottle harvested is the best! On average, a tapped maple will produce 10 to 20 gallons of sap per tap.

Wisconsin's unemployment rate remains at a record low. The State Department of Workforce Development says that only 2.8% of people looking for jobs are unable to find them. That makes it a seller's market when it comes to jobs, not only for adults looking for careers. But for young people looking for summertime work Rudy's Drive in restaurant is a local business that often hires young people for their first job. With the competition for workers the pressure grows on employers to make the workplace attractive to potential employees. The quality of the workforce appears to be good but for employers in a strong economy the challenge is keeping top notch employees.

To some medical news now; new conflicting guidance on how often women should get mammograms. The American College of Physicians is now recommending the majority of women get a mammogram every other year beginning at age 50. Doctors say these suggestions are for average risk women... This is important because, 80% of women diagnosed with breast cancer were considered at average risk before their diagnosis. As there is little to no agreement between most organizations, health experts say your decision on getting tested should be patient and physician centered, focusing on your individual needs and health. Dr. Ashton appeared on Good Morning America with Robin Roberts to talk about this topic, and she says there will always be pros and cons to tests you may consider. So weigh your options and again talk to your physician about what's right for you.

When it comes to kids, parents, and playtime, we often think of dads as being loud and physical, while moms are not. Researchers studying how parents and kids relate have identified certain attitudes during play that can make a difference. Brittany Lake has more. When Horacio Ruiz has spare time to spend with his son, it's all about soccer wherever there's room. Rough and tumble dad, or more reserved mom? Even during play, is there a parenting approach that can better help a child's development? Natasha Cabrera studies parents' actions and the effect on their child's social development, especially intrusive play, that's where the parent takes decisions away from the child. Social scientists followed 74 low-income families of moms, dads and toddlers and taped their playtime together when the children were 24 months and 48 months. The researchers observed that fathers were more intense during intrusive play than moms. Researchers found that the emotional tone of the play was more important than the activity itself. For example, when moms were unhappy and intrusive, children were less sociable. When moms were happy, children were more sociable, early steps toward learning self-regulation and better behavior. The University of Maryland researchers found that children tended to show more positive emotions during intrusive play with their fathers. They say that's likely because even though the fathers were controlling the play they were more positive.

Twenty five grams is about 0.8 ounces and roughly equates to a thin slice of bacon. Red meat also caused an increase in risk but it took a larger amount for the same effect. Researchers discovered when a person ate just over on ounce and a half of red meat their cancer risk increased by 19%. A typical hamburger is about four ounces of meat.

And now CBD sweet treats join the specialties at Chocolaterian Cafe in Middleton. And they're not alone. The Pickle Jar in Madison sells CBD iced coffee, one of many businesses getting creative with the oil that's said to treat pain, sleep problems, even depression. Doctor Michael McNett says before you try these CBD specials it's best to make sure it's more than just hype. Ask where the CBD oil is coming from. Look for a pure form, of good quality. And know the dose you're consuming. Leanne Cordisco says her chocolates are precisely measured to have 20 milligrams of CBD. Pickle Jar's coffee has nearly 60. Chocolaterian works with a local farm certified to grow organic CBD oil. Brittany Lake reports; dinner time for Elvia and her two sons are all about healthy eating. But that wasn't always the case. The Lazaros live in a community where access to nutritional information is limited. Shari Barkin studies pediatric obesity and conducted a study of 610 parents and children. Doctor Barkin wanted to know if you teach parents good health habits, can that change behavior and in turn lower their child's risk for obesity? The sessions were followed by nine months of coaching over the phone. Finally, researchers sent text reminders to keep families active. All together researchers followed families for three years and found that kids who took part in the intervention group ate 100 calories fewer per day than kids who were in the control group. Doctor Barkin savs it matters that parents and kids improve their habits together. She recommends families use their local parks and rec centers and be consistent. These habits need to be sustained over time by parents and kids. The researchers also say environmental stress might make it hard for people living in disadvantaged neighborhoods to maintain their body weight. Doctor Barkin and her fellow researchers noted that the interventions did not continue to work as effectively during the passive phase of the trial, the point where researchers sent text reminders.

News 19's Brittany Lake explains how to recognize a bully in the family, the harm they can cause, and what parents can do to minimize the risk. A little sibling rivalry is something all parents come to expect. But how do you know when one child is crossing the line? Dieter Wolke studies bullying and its effects at home and school. Wolke looked at research from 14,000 kids over a 20 year span, starting when their moms were pregnant. Wolke found a clear relationship between home and school. Wolke also says those who were victims of bullying at home were at twice the risk of developing depression, anxiety and self-harm. Bullies were triple the risk of developing mental health problems, even as serious as schizophrenia or bipolar disorder. Parents often have no idea of the severity of the problem, which could be physical, like hitting and pinching, or psychological, like excessive teasing or excluding them. Wolke says if parents suspect bullying, don't trivialize it. Take steps to intervene. He also suggests being proactive as soon as a second child is born. Integrate the first born into the care of the second born. Make clear to the oldest that both children have different needs, but mom and dad still have enough time for both of them. Steps that could help build strong sibling bonds for a lifetime. The social scientists also found that firstborn boys are more likely to be the bullies at home. Dieter Wolke says sibling bullying is about the loss of resources; when a second child is born, parents have half the time, and half the money to spend. The oldest is reacting to those changes.

You want to spend time outside on a day like this so .you may use sunscreen but this summer one type of sunscreen is raising questions for regulators. It's that time of year, the heat is on and people come out of winter hibernation for some fun in the sun. But before going outside many of us will hit the store finding ourselves overwhelmed with sunscreen options and this summer there's a new concern to factor in. To determine if you have a chemical sunscreen, look in the ingredients list for oxy benzone or octinoxate. Chemical sunscreens work by absorbing into your skin and acting as a sponge for the UV rays? Filtering them? But the FDA recently conducted a pilot study of chemical sunscreens and determined that: "without further testing, FDA does not know what levels of absorption can be considered safe." The Consumer Healthcare Products Association, a sunscreen manufacturer's trade group, released a statement saying "Sunscreen manufacturers, FDA, and dermatologists are aligned on the goal of protecting the public from the harmful effects of the sun" pointing out that the authors of the FDA study say "These results do not indicate that individuals should refrain from the use of sunscreen." For people who want to continue using a chemical sunscreen? Dr. Bowe suggests using sun protective clothing and only applying it to areas exposed to the sun; the other option, physical sunscreens. These use a mineral zinc oxide or titanium dioxide that sits on the surface of your skin to block the sun. Experts say while they require more diligence in use to work well. The FDA considers physical sunscreens to be "generally recognized as safe and effective." Whatever you decide to use doctors say it's important to use something, especially for the little ones.

It found that in 2017, 7% of future moms in the US admitted to using marijuana while expecting. That's more than double compared to 15 years earlier. The pot usage is the highest in the first trimester, when a fetus is most vulnerable. There's no clear-cut answer as to how marijuana affects a fetus but the CDC says marijuana could lead to developmental problems and low birth weight.

One third of Wisconsin counties do not have don't have gynecologists available. Emilee Fannon examines the barriers some women face and the program designed to help address the doctor shortage. Sheena Mike is about to have her third child at Divine Savior Health in Portage, the nearest hospital and the closest ob-gyn to her hometown of Westfield in Marquette County. It's about 30 minutes away and at times a drive she calls stressful. This is the reality for thousands of expectant mothers across Wisconsin. Some have to drive much longer, hours, to get a check-up. And if something were to go wrong Dr. Brenda Jenkin is the only ob-gyn serving patients in two counties, Portage and Marquette. The American Congress of Obstetricians and Gynecologist found 26 of the 72 counties in Wisconsin do not have any ob gyn's. The problem Jenkin's says it's hard to convince aspiring doctors to practice in rural areas. Resources are limited and for ob gyn resident student Alexa Lowry the job can be isolating. Dr. Lowry is the second resident involved in the first of its kind program at the UW School of Medicine and Public Health: 27 News first did a story about it two years ago when it started In an effort to fill doctor shortages in rural areas. With projections showing fewer interested in the field and a growing female population Experts say it will take time to fill the gap. It's a disease that affects one and a half million Americans but most others have never heard of it. It's called Lupus and it is generally not fatal, but it affects a person's entire body and limits their ability to live a normal life. News 19's Brittany Lake met one woman who tells you what it is like to live with Lupus. In a peaceful, backyard in Holmen a gentle breeze passes through. Nichole Csete is trying to channel that peace by tending to her garden. She uses straw bales to plant a variety of veggies. Her garden is her sanctuary. It takes her away from the daily hustle and bustle of life and eases some of her pain. Living with Lupus has derailed her life; diagnosed at just 17, Nichole had to make some major life changes. Her day job is indoors, but her free time is spent here. Nichole says the Wisconsin sun is a little tamer than in Colorado. She's finding solace she once thought was lost, but still worrying about the future. It's a sport that pre-dates the Roman Empire and the first Olympic games. Bowling is also a sport with a rich history in Wisconsin. Rolling a perfect game, 12 strikes in a row, is often an elusive goal. News 19's Brittany Lake introduces us to one local teen who knows the thrill. It was a cold February night at Bangor Lanes Bowling Alley when 19 year old Cole Brenstein did something most bowlers could only dream of, a really good game, like perfect. He bowled a 300 and then "cooled off only had a 202". After that the magic happened. His hoping paid off. Cole bowled strike after strike after strike and then it all came down to the very last roll. So you may be thinking "what are the chances?" The probability of bowling a 300 once is 11,500 to one. Cole did it twice in the same series. It's a bowling feat to brag about. His Uncle Mark called him up and Cole took his place that night in their men's league. Cole credits his talent to practice and a little luck. His coach says he's always been his go-to guy. He and his coach even got this novice bowler to get a strike. While perfection might not be attainable every time, Cole will keep on throwing. A sport he enjoys, and is pretty good at, and a game he can play with his family and friends by his side. Cole is currently taking classes at Western Technical College and getting his general eds, he hopes to someday be a game warden for the DNR. He says he will continue to bowl in the men's league for fun.

As we age we start to lose balance, flexibility, strength and muscle function. One way to combat those problems is through dance. At a local dance studio, there's an unlikely hero leading the charge. News 19's Brittany Lake and photographer Travis Judell give us an inside look at a typical night on the dance floor. It's a busy Tuesday night at Misty's Dance Unlimited in Onalaska. Feet scurry and shuffle into class. This adult tap class draws in a variety of dancers, stay-at-home moms, preachers, medical and business professionals all working on new steps and routines. But tap is tricky. Despite some minor bumps, they're getting more out of it than just new moves. These dancers are making music with their feet and they feel better when they're dancing. That proves especially true for the older dancers. Like resident grandpa 82 year old Ron Rogers. His granddaughter is a former student of Misty's and his daughter received a flyer promoting the adult tap class. And while he's really digging his heels into it, he's enjoying himself. Stumbling and even scoliosis won't stop him. Ron is finding his footing and proving it's never too late to step into a new routine. The Milwaukee Bucks and their fans have waited a long time to win another NBA championship. In fact it's been 48 years. Reporter Carrie Antlfinger takes you to Wisconsin's Greek community. From Bucks-inspired sandwiches and cookies to giant banners downtown Milwaukee has high hopes for the Bucks. The team hasn't gotten this far in the playoffs since 2001. Fans say it's long overdue. The last time that happened was in 1971, nearly five decades ago. It's particularly sweet for the tight knit Greek community in southeastern Wisconsin, population around 10,000. One of the team's and NBA's biggest stars, Giannis Antetokounmpo was born in Greece and wears his Greek pride on his sleeve. His brother even waived the Greek flag when he was drafted. Fans call him the Greek freak. Every year the team hosts a "Greek night" and the 6 foot 11 power forward makes a point of singing the Greek national anthem. Tim Stasinoulias is the president of the local chapter of a Greek culture advocacy group. That pride spills over this sandwich named after Antetokounmpo. Tomorrow voters in La Crescent and Hokah will decide the fate of another school referendum. The school district is asking voters for a total of 29 million dollars; 23 and a half million to replace and expand the district's elementary school and pay for other renovations and maintenance projects. The second question asks for five and a half million for renovations to the middle and high school and expansion of the athletic parking lot. The plan is similar to one in 2015 that voters rejected by a two to one margin. It called for 25 and a half million for a new elementary school and improvements to the middle and high school. The 2015 referendum called for construction of the new school on the Abnet Fields, this one would build the new school on the current site. The district hopes taxpayers are more willing to support this referendum in part because a 1998 referendum is ending so the tax impact would not be as large. Cardille also says the last upgrades to the elementary school came 20 years ago. Opponents of the referendum point out voters approved a referendum in 2017 to provide ten million dollars for operational costs which added $200 a year to the average property tax bill for each of the next ten years. Approval of tomorrow's referendum would add another $327 a year to that same tax bill for each of the next 20 years.

Students enjoy his classes and it's possible students throughout the country will benefit from his ability because he's part of a national group creating a guide designed to improve teaching in physics departments nationwide along with enhancing career preparation, an opportunity that became available when he was serving on the American Physical Society Committee on Education. That came up while Sudha, as he's known, was helping redevelop and improve the physics program at the UW-La Crosse. So now Sudha is helping develop one in part because he works in one of the top undergraduate physics programs in the country. Chancellor Joe Gow says in 1982 there was so few physics majors the administration considered eliminating the program. While work continues on the guide Sudha remains busy in the classroom teaching students in La Crosse what others may soon learn in all parts of the country. The university says Professor Sudhakaran reviews sections of the guide and is a contributor to the section on undergraduate research, something that helped bring the program at La Crosse to national prominence.

There's another initiative aimed at recruiting UW students tonight, this one a bill drafted by one Wisconsin representative hoping to keep out of state students in Wisconsin once they graduate. The proposal would offer a multi-thousand dollar cash incentive. The incentive would vary from campus to campus. Students would essentially be paid back based on the difference between in-state tuition and out of state tuition. Over the course of five annual grants each worth about ten-percent of that difference. For out of state UW La Crosse graduates that'd be $882 every year for five years. The UW system reports that last academic year out of state students made up more than 26% of their overall student body.

UW System President Ray Cross came to the UW La Crosse today to enthusiastically support phase two of the science building project. It is tied up in the budget process at the state capitol. Cross met with UW L Chancellor Joe Gow, touring Cowley Hall this afternoon. The 54 year old facility is in disrepair and in need of major renovations if it is to remain viable. But that's an investment the UW System believes is better made tearing it down and building a new science building. Gow said the science building would meet student's demands in so many areas. Phase one was completed in 2018 at a cost of $82 million. The new facility in phase 2 would complete construction of the science center to house new labs, a greenhouse observatory and new instructional and research labs. In March Republicans rejected all 82 projects including the UWL science center in Governor Evers capital budget. Those lawmakers objected to the size of the budget, two and a half billion dollars, and the borrowing it calls for to pay for the projects. But the rejection of the budget does not mean the projects won't get funded, but they prefer to have the projects included in the regular budget process.

Last year's race for Governor and the last presidential vote in Wisconsin, all decided by about one-percent or less, it's hard to imagine things could get any closer. Marquette poll director Charles Franklin says even in previous years with close elections, about 4-to-5 percent more Wisconsin voters identified as Democrats than Republicans but the poll numbers show that has changed. He says the shift toward the Republican Party is largely due to a 13-point swing among non-college, white men. And it's a new trend, first showing up after the 2016 election. And with the partisan split now more evenly-balanced than ever, Franklin says the focus may intensify on the 9-percent or so of independent voters. Franklin says independent voters may be a small group, but they can shift the balance in close races.

But on Sunday the President reversed course writing in a Tweet the Democratic-led House Judiciary Committee has been negotiating with Mueller to offer his testimony. The on-going battle between the White House and House Democrats however is far from over. President Trump is vowing to fight all congressional subpoenas all while his Department of Justice ignored a 'final' deadline, this morning, to turn over the unredacted Mueller report. The House Judiciary Committee is now moving forward with proceedings to hold Barr in contempt of Congress. And now the Justice Department is giving the House panel a counter offer. In a statement released this afternoon the DOJ invites Committee staff to come to the department Wednesday to discuss a mutually acceptable accommodation.

Wisconsin Republican Assembly Speaker Robin Vos signaled support for the idea of a ban on abortions after six weeks. Like in Alabama Republicans control both houses of the state legislature but unlike Alabama, which has a Republican Governor who signed the bill, Wisconsin has a Democratic Governor who will veto a six week abortion ban bill if it reaches his desk. The Wisconsin Assembly passed an anti-abortion bill today requiring doctor's care for babies that survive abortion attempts or face prison time. More signs of the toxic atmosphere in Washington DC; today President Trump abruptly ended a planned meeting with Democratic House Speaker Nancy Pelosi saying he won't discuss other issues until the investigations end. ABC's Serena Marshall reports on how both sides are communicating with each other through the media. The day started with the House Speaker trying to dampen a growing revolt from within her own Democratic caucus over impeaching President Trump, when she casually dropped this line that comment striking a nerve on the other side of Pennsylvania Avenue where the President was preparing for a meeting with her and Senate Democratic Leader Chuck Schumer, on repairing the nation's crumbling infrastructure, instead that meeting lasting mere minutes with the angry President storming into the Rose Garden. Democratic leaders don't believe this was an impromptu rebuke but an excuse to get out of negotiating what they estimate will be trillions in infrastructure spending one of those print-outs: an ABC news graphic showing the cost of the Mueller investigation, but the White House did not include the second half showing "what those efforts produced." The President insisted he wants to work on infrastructure, but while Democrats insist senior administration sources tell ABC News some aides close to the President tried to stop him from going to the Rose Garden for that event but Pelosi's "cover-up" remarks pushed him over the edge and while the battle between the branches continues one thing is clear: infrastructure week is going nowhere fast. Also today a second federal judge declined to block house lawmakers from accessing President Trump's financial records. The ruling means the President's legal team has one week to find a way to prevent the banks from handing over the information.

President Trump's re-election campaign hasn't officially begun and already there's a shake-up. As President Trump prepared to kick off his re-election bid in Florida tomorrow, CNN has learned the Trump campaign fired several pollsters after leaked internal data revealed the President lagged behind 2020 Democratic frontrunner Joe Biden in several key battleground states, something Mr. Trump denied in an interview with ABC News. The Trump campaign also rejected the polls' accuracy, writing in a statement: "These leaked numbers are ancient" adding "Since then we have seen huge swings in the President's favor." A person familiar with the matter tells CNN the President is fuming. Another source says Trump is now obsessed with the numbers asking regularly for updates or newer polls. The White House echoed President Trump's rejection of the polls. Last week the President again downplayed how important they are to him. Mr. Trump also explained why he held off from firing Special Counsel Robert Mueller, despite Mueller's report describing how the President did try to fire him. A new NBC/Wall Street Journal poll shows a 10 point increase of Americans who say Congress has enough evidence to begin impeachment hearings against President Trump while 48% say Congress should not begin impeachment hearings. The two former Manson Family members give an inside view of what life with Charles was like; how the counter culture of the '60s that extolled sex, drugs and rock 'n roll shaped their view of the world; and the convictions that moved the group toward a violent drug-fueled murder spree that left seven dead, including actress Sharon Tate, who was more than eight months pregnant at the time and living in the home she shared with her, husband, Roman Polanski.

Ultimately, both in 1969 changed America and the world forever. "Generation Woodstock" spotlights a trailblazing, freethinking generation that was determined to change America by challenging the status how its spirit lives on in the current youth movements of 2019.

1969: Fortunate Sons (Season Finale)

In 1969, as millions of young Americans turned 18 and were eligible for the draft for the first time, parents and their young adult children were at odds over what it meant to be American. Were the hippies waving Viet Cong flags the real patriots, or was it the "silent majority" who voted Richard Nixon into office and supported the war effort? Where did that leave the young men returning from the war – the drafted and the volunteers – who were changed forever by what they had seen? The show explores the growing divide in the nation that year.
