Rising prescription drug costs were a topic of discussion at a round table this afternoon with US Senator Tammy Baldwin. About a dozen people told the senator their personal stories, how high healthcare costs negatively impact their lives, from not being able to afford insulin to making the decision between getting medical care for a child versus paying for medication. Obamacare was another topic of discussion and something that will likely be a focus for whom ever fills the void left in the United States Supreme Court. Senator Baldwin weighed in on that vacancy today saying she will not vote in favor of President Trump's nominee Neil Gorsuch. A spokesperson with the Republican Party of Wisconsin released a statement saying Senator Baldwin is breaking her promise to people of Wisconsin by not giving Gorsuch fair consideration.

The Minnesota House has approved a transportation bill that republicans say will help the state begin work on much needed road and bridge projects. The nearly 2.2 billion dollar legislation passed by a vote of 76-54; lawmakers continued their perennial battles over light rail projects and what funding sources to use for transportation projects. Some republicans say the bill fixes many of Minnesota's deficient roads and bridges without raising taxes or fees, but democrats say the bill relies too much on non-dedicated funds.

Tuesday is Voting Day in the State of Wisconsin. In our area several races will appear on the ballot. Within the City of La Crosse six contested City Council races, along with the race for City Clerk. Statewide Tony Evers will face challenger Lowell Holtz for State Superintendent and in Holmen the school district will ask voters to approve a 4 million dollar referendum. Several other local races, depending on where you live, will appear on the ballot. Remember, voter id laws are in effect, turnout expected around 18%.

President Trump's proposed budget outlines plans to eliminate the Office of Community Oriented Policing Services, or COPS program. It's responsible for funding thousands of state and local police agencies, including right here in La Crosse, and includes assistance with hiring new police officers and obtaining new technology that assists law enforcement in doing their job. Representative Ron Kind recently wrote a letter to the Budget Committee asking for support in continued funding. The Third Congressional District, including La Crosse and Eau Claire, has received more than 1.4 million dollars in COPS funding since 2010.

The Housing and Community Development Act of 1974 written by President Gerald Ford went into effect the following year, the goal: help with reducing poverty and alleviate distressed housing. News 19's Tianna Vanderhei joins us now to explain how block grants continue helping communities today including La Crosse. Community development block grants provide funding for smaller communities like La Crosse to invest in their neighborhoods. Since the late nineties the City of La Crosse has replaced more than one hundred homes for a total value of 7-million dollars. Most of those homes were condemned, foreclosed on by a bank or possessed some stigma associated with crime. Jason Gilman, the Director of Planning and Development for the city, says La Crosse has the largest burden of workforce housing in the Coulee Region, that over time has deteriorated and focusing on these revitalization efforts works to improve a number of areas. The funding does vary from year to year. Right now the city receives about $700,000 in the community development block grant funds and another $300,000 in home funds. Both of those amounts are utilized for acquiring land and property and replacing it. Gilman stresses this federal money is crucial in order to re-invest in our neighborhoods. 22-19 Lofts, on South Avenue, the old Bakalars Sausage Company building, is one example where the community development grant funds were used to renovate a space.

Slug: ELECTION-LIVE

The School District of Holmen is hoping voters approve a 4 million dollar referendum on today's ballot. A yes vote would give the district the green light to get started on a series of projects that are part of a larger, long term development plan. News 19's Caroline Hecker is live at Village Hall in Holmen and tells you what you need to know about that referendum. As you alluded to this referendum is part of a five phase plan. Phases 1 and 2 are included within this referendum. The referendum is broken up into three questions; the first asks voters for around 3 million dollars to fund enhancements to building security, question 2 would allow the district to build a new parking lot and an access road on the high school property, the third and final question would ask voters for $300,000 to create additional seating at Empire Stadium and purchase synthetic turf. The district reach its goal if the referendum question is approved. If voters vote yes on question 3 the district's goal is to have turf installed before this coming season. Reminder, polls close at 8. We'll have full results from the Holmen referendum coming up tonight at 10. The district says if the referendum passes school property taxes will not increase.

It may come as a surprise for many of you that cheese does not have an official designation in Wisconsin, which is of course the Dairy State. Well the state assembly unanimously voted to help change that today, welcoming cheese in to the club as the state's official dairy product. In a 96 to zero vote, the assembly voted cheese to join the ranks of the wood violet, honey bee and milk among other state recognized symbols. Wisconsin has recognized milk as the state's official beverage since 1987 with the dairy cow its domestic animal since 1971. But this is a first for cheese, even though the state produces the most cheese in the country. At 11 billion pounds per year. The bill now heads to Governor Walker's desk where when signed it will receive its official designation.

News 19's Caroline Hecker is live at the county administration building with reaction. This was one of the most talked about issues on the spring ballot. Everyone seems to be able to agree that roadways are in desperate need of repair but it's how to go about paying for it that seems to have people divided. The Prat Tax would add a local sales tax of half a percent too many local businesses and that money would be used to help improve roads. Those opposed say it would help roads but at the expense of local businesses. County Board Chair Tara Johnson says if referendum fails the county has no real alternative plan. Johnson told me she feels as if the public was well educated on the tax before heading to the polls. One of the biggest divides is between the City of La Crosse and outlying county areas. We will have more numbers for you as they become available later in the newscast. Opponents of the Premier Tax say it's meant for places like the Wisconsin Dells with a higher tourism rate and larger tax base.

Congress is reacting to the US airstrikes in Syria. President Trump launched a missile attack on a Syrian air force base sending the message that this week's chemical weapons attack won't be tolerated. Today, members of congress asked the Trump administration what's next after his first major military action strikes on Syria. Fifty nine tomahawk cruise missiles launched from two American war ships in the Mediterranean, striking a Syrian air base. President Trump gave the order from his Mar-a-Lago estate, changing his mind about Syrian President Bashar al-Assad after this week's deadly chemical weapons attack. Syria and Russia called the strike an act of aggression. UN ambassador Nikki Haley was at an emergency meeting of the US Security Council. Senators briefed Friday on Capitol Hill all agree Assad needs to be held accountable, disagreeing after Trump didn't ask for congressional approval to strike. The top republican in the senate says at this point that debate is not needed. But many members of congress say Assad must go and they want a comprehensive plan from the Trump administration.

Critics say the Walker and republican lawmakers are upset the magazine promotes science like climate change and its environmental efforts. Opponents also say older readers do not use social media and would no longer have access to the publication. The magazine is supported by subscriptions and had nearly 84,000 of them as of December.

Slug: FIRE CHIEFS

The City of La Crosse is entering the final stages in its search for a new fire chief. Current Chief Gregg Cleveland announced his retirement earlier this year after 11 years on the job. This morning the La Crosse Police and Fire Commission along with Mayor Tim Kabat interviewed the final two candidates. News 19's Caroline Hecker spoke with the commission and explains what the city is looking for in its next chief. The City of La Crosse could have a new fire chief as soon as next month. That decision is pending following the Police and Fire Commission's final two interviews on Tuesday. Retired Washington DC Deputy Fire Chief Brian Lee interviewed with the commission first followed by Deputy Fire Chief Ken Gilliam of the St. Paul Fire Department. Mayor Tim Kabat also sat in on the interviews, conveying how important the position is the city's ongoing revitalization efforts. The commission says on Thursday it will meet again and after another closed session hopes to be close to selecting a first choice candidate. Background checks will be performed by the police department and city's HR department. The commission says pending the outcome a job will likely be offered to one of the candidates in the coming weeks. As Varoline mentioned Brian Lee is a retired deputy fire chief for the Washington DC Fire and EMS Department. However according to an article published in the Washington Times in 2009 he was serving as an Assistant Chief of Police and Standards and authorized an agreement with a deputy chief that allowed that employee to work as a fire chief out of state while remaining a DC employee. The article goes on to say the arrangement was made to keep the employee on the department's books until he turned 50 so he could collect his pension immediately upon his retirement instead of waiting until he turned 55. The following year Lee resigned and was reassigned to a Deputy Chief position in 2011, later retiring in 2016 according to the paper. News 19 asked Doug Happel today if the commission is aware of the allegations. He says it was addressed at today's meeting and said "all of those things can be further checked out in background checks."

A roughly $200,000 project hangs in the balance to address some of these concerns. That proposal is currently under 30-day referral. It will not be voted on in tomorrow's full council meeting. The La Crosse Fire Department uses four stations; all built over 50 years ago. Now the Eau Claire based design company Five Bugles recommends rebuilding all four fire stations and adding a fifth station on La Crosse's south side. News 19s Mackenzie Amundsen explains health and safety risks the current stations pose to firefighters. Fire Chief Gregg Cleveland says the state of the fire stations didn't happen overnight and the solution won't either. Chief Cleveland says firefighting is a unique occupation, requiring firefighters to live where they work. For example, firefighters might come back from a fire with blood on their clothes and have no place to properly wash their uniforms. Another thing, Cleveland says the stations don't have proper ventilation so the ceilings are stained with diesel fumes from the trucks, keeping all that inside. Chief Cleveland says these working conditions combined with the dangers of fighting fires pose a serious health risk to those working in the stations. Along with rebuilding the current fire stations the consultants recommend building a fifth station on the south side. Chief Cleveland hopes to take the plans to city council so that they can work together moving forward.

Wisconsin Republicans came together for their state convention this weekend to celebrate perhaps the biggest election success in their history while keeping a wary and watchful eye on the future. Slug: SPEEDING TRAFFIC

Most drivers feel they can get away with driving a few miles over the speed limit without getting a ticket. Last night we told you about a new proposal to reduce the speed limit on Losey Boulevard from 30 to 25 miles per hour. The reasoning is that drivers already drive faster than the limit and by reducing it drivers would match their speeding to the new limit. News 19s Mackenzie Amundsen tells you where officers see the most speeding drivers in La Crosse and how they enforce the speed limits. Captain Jason Melby says the highest levels of speeding are happening on city roads with the highest number of traffic. In the last three years La Crosse police have pulled more than 2,000 speeding drivers over on West Avenue and Losey Boulevard. Those traffic stops resulted in both warnings and citations. Melby says the four-lane roads encourage higher speeds. He admits other roads in La Crosse might have a high volume of speeding drivers but officers can only enforce the limits on roads that are safe to do so. Melby understands that both West Avenue and Losey Boulevard are connecting roads from one end of La Crosse to the other. But he says those roads also travel through school zones and areas with a lot of pedestrian traffic. He says the police department is looking into installing digital speed limit signs on those roads so that drivers can see just how fast they're going. But for now, he just wants to remind drivers to slow down and be aware of their surroundings. Melby says there isn't one simple solution. He says other solutions include environmental changes like roundabouts or speed bumps.

Slug: PRISON PUPPIES

It's called Prisoners with a Purpose and it's a new program at Jackson County Correctional Institute where a partnership with non-profit Can-Do-Canines allows inmates to train service dogs. Today 10 four month old puppies met their new owners who reside behind prison walls. News 19's Caroline Hecker spent the day talking with inmates about the new program and explains why it's a win-win situation. Jackson County Correctional is the second prison in Wisconsin Can-Do-Canines partners with.

All of the puppies arriving today are from the same litter and are likely to leave a lasting impact on the inmates as well as the people they'll eventually serve. Beyond the barbed wire of Jackson County Correctional Institute you'll find 10 newfound friendships. It's the last place you'd expect to see a litter of puppies, but for inmates it's a little slice of heaven. A selective group of inmates will train these puppies to become service dogs and for Robert Coenen and his new buddy Pippa it's a chance to do some good. Once a week the inmates will take part in a 2 hour training course, taking what they learn and applying it throughout the week. Having been around dogs his whole life Robert assumed it was a lost privilege when he came to prison. But Can-Do-Canines is giving him the opportunity to do something he says is long overdue, help. At the end of those 12 months Pippa will leave the jail and Robert's side, but he'll have given her the opportunity to benefit someone else's life and to Robert that makes his time mean something. Inmates go through an extensive application process so of the dozens who apply only 25 to 30 are selected for the program. On weekends the dogs go to foster homes to help acclimate them to life outside of prison, which allows them to go into places like the store or movie theater. In a year's time the dogs will leave the prison and go through more training for a few months before they're placed. Can-Do-Canines currently has170 people on its waiting list for a service dog. When the dogs are fully trained they're worth about 25,000. However thanks to help of volunteers the dogs are given to those in need for a $50 application fee. If this round of training goes well the prison says it would love to bring in 10 more dogs for inmates to train.

Fire Chief Gregg Cleveland announced his retirement at the beginning of this year. Now after five months of searching for his replacement a new fire chief for the City of La Crosse has officially been appointed. News 19's Mackenzie Amundsen tells us about the soon to be new chief, Ken Gilliam. Gilliam comes to La Crosse with years of firefighting experience as Deputy Chief of training for the St. Paul Fire Department. The Police and Fire Commission say his training experience set him apart from other candidates. Ken Gilliam's peers told him to apply for the fire chief position. Gilliam says the La Crosse Fire Department clicked. Doug Happel describes the fire department as young with a lot of turnover. It's what Gilliam brings to the table that set him apart. Happel hopes to see the fire department move forward and Gilliam plans to do just that while remembering the foundation laid by Chief Cleveland and the many others before him. Gilliam says he is in the process of finding a place to live with his family. He is excited to start working with the department. Happel says he is happy the hiring process is over. He says finding a new fire chief is something that requires a lot of time because it needs to be done right. He's confident Gilliam is the right fit to move the fire department forward. Gilliam will start training with Chief Cleveland on June 19th. Chief Cleveland's last day is June 30th. Gilliam starts the very next day.

Twenty three million more Americans would be uninsured by 2026 under the new health care bill passed by the House, that's according to the non-partisan Congressional Budget Office report, released a little more than an hour ago. That compares to the 28-million under 65 who would lack insurance that same year under the Affordable Care Act signed by President Obama. The CBO analysis also says while premiums would be lower under the new bill designed to replace the Affordable Care Act, those premiums would pay for less coverage. A lawsuit could force the State of Minnesota to pay lawmakers in cases of a government shutdown. It's been a week of anger and political threats since Governor Dayton de-funded the Minnesota legislature. Minnesota's in uncharted constitutional waters after the Governor vetoed, completely zeroed out, all of the funding for the legislature, which he told us he has every legal right to do. The Governor's veto means all funding for the state house and senate disappear July 1st. The house can keep it going for about 3 months after that by spending down reserves. The senate can only keep the lights on for about 6 weeks. But its possible lawmakers will not only get paid, they'll get a raise. A government watchdog group went to court to force the state to give lawmakers a 45% pay hike even though many don't want it. That's after a voters approved a special commission that raised the pay from $31,191 a year to $45,000. Lawmakers could get paid even if the legislature shuts down this summer. The Association for Government Accountability argues the voters approved the constitutional pay amendment and lawmakers cannot reject it

Use of solitary confinement and pepper spray at the state's youth prisons must be dramatically scaled back, that's what a federal judge ordered this week after hearing hours of testimony and watching videos of practices at the Lincoln Hills School for Boys and Copper Lake School for Girls. Both are on the same property, in Irma in rural Lincoln County. Capitol Bureau Chief Greg Neumann explains changes the judge ordered on Friday telling State Department of Corrections officials that not even Unabomber Ted Kaczinsky faces such restrictive confinement as the teens at Lincoln Hills and Copper Lake. Chief US District Judge James Peterson ordered them to stop practices he found unconstitutional. Judge Peterson ordered Wisconsin Department of Corrections officials to devise a plan to reduce the use of solitary confinement, reduce or eliminate the use of pepper spray and the use of mechanical constraints. The Department of Corrections must try to develop that plan with lawyers for the ACLU of Wisconsin, the group that sued the State in January on behalf of teen inmates at both prisons. Lawyers for the State Department of Corrections declined comment after today's hearing but a DOC spokesperson wrote "DOC has consistently worked to identify and implement substantial reforms at Copper Lake School/Lincoln Hills School. We look forward to using the next two weeks to further these efforts. Secretary Litscher has full confidence in the Division of Juvenile Corrections to continue making necessary reforms." Larry Dupuis says that first meeting between the ACLU and DOC officials will take place next Monday. They are to report back to Judge Peterson with a plan two weeks from today. If they can't agree on one each party must submit their own individual plan.

Adults who let teenagers drink in their homes would be breaking the law under a new proposal backed by two republican lawmakers. The bill would address what's commonly referred to as the "social host" loophole in current state law. In October the 2nd District Court of Appeals ruled in favor of a Fond du Lac man who threw a graduation party for his son where underage drinking occurred. The court ruled the city ordinance the man had violated was invalid because local penalties cannot exceed state penalties. News 19's Caroline Hecker spoke with La Crosse police and a local group working to change the drinking culture in La Crosse and joins us now with her findings. The bill circulating hopes to clarify language currently used in state law. As it stands, it prohibits people who aren't 21 from drinking alcohol in "premises" owned or controlled by people of the legal drinking age. Last fall, the 2nd District Court of Appeals ruled a "premise" only applies to an establishment like a bar or liquor store, but local officials are hopeful homes are soon included, which in turn, could cut down on underage drinking parties. As prom and graduation season gets underway the pressure for parents to host underage drinking parties grows stronger, but the choice to do so can mean a lot more than a small fine. In the City of La Crosse you'll get slapped with a $300 fine if you're caught hosting, but it can also result in criminal charges depending on the situation. According to state data 15% of high school students report they've engaged in binge drinking in the past 30 days. That's down sharply from 30% in 2013. The drinking culture in the City of La Crosse is something both law enforcement and local coalitions continue to battle. Ed Kondracki is a former police chief in La Crosse. Now he's the Chair of the Risky Drinking Behavior Coalition and a supporter of closing the so called "social host" loophole. If state law is amended local departments will likely mirror that language within city ordinances, creating an even bigger deterrent for parents everywhere. Under the proposed bill people who break the law could be fined $500 for their first offense and face $10,000 in fines and up to nine months in jail for subsequent offenses. La Crosse police say under-age drinking parties give both parents and kids a false sense of security that there is a safe way to drink underage. An identical bill passed an assembly committee in 2013 but stalled after counties and cities voiced concerns about maintaining local control.

A former Onalaska Police Department Records Specialist convicted of felony theft learned her fate today in La Crosse County Court. A judge ordered 48 year old Kari Neumann to pay back $70,000 stolen over the course of five years along with serving 3 years of probation. The case unfolded a year ago when a woman reported she had a receipt for the payment of a parking ticket but the city had no record of that payment. News 19's Caroline Hecker just returned from court and explains why the judge elected not to impose jail time. A Monroe County Judge handed down Neumann's sentence as a way for the county to remain impartial. Judge David Rice ruled she can avoid spending six months in jail if she reimburses the city within one year. Back when this all started Neumann estimated she had taken around $7,000, but an audit found she embezzled more than $70,000, which she says she used to pay living and medical expenses after her husband became injured. Special Prosecutor Tim Gaskell says he believes Neumann stole money from the city for more than 5 years, estimating it could have gone on as many as 10 years ago. He recommended a six month jail sentence and time on probation. Judge Rice told Neumann despite no jail time the money matters and no one is at fault except her. Based on what was said today in court Neumann is confident she will be able to pay the city back within the next month using money from her retirement account. The state argued the crime had a financial impact on the City of Onalaska and emotional impact on her longtime colleagues, one of its reasons for requesting jail time.

Authorities say an Eau Claire police officer fatally shot a 25-year-old man after the man refused to drop a knife and came at officers. Late Saturday morning police received a 911 call about a man banging on doors and yelling in the hallway of an Eau Claire apartment complex. When officers arrived, they found the man in a parking lot holding a knife. The Eau Claire Police Chief says authorities used "less-lethal options," including firing bean bag rounds and using a stun gun, before fatally shooting the suspect. The officer involved is a police veteran with 20 years on the job. His name is not being released at this time. It is the second time police have fatally shot someone in Eau Claire this year.

A Facebook feud led to a shooting this afternoon in La Crosse. No injuries, police arrested four men. Police say the shooting happened at 1008 State Street just before five pm. After a short chase officers arrested four suspects who had driven away from the scene. Officers found two handguns along with marijuana, cash and .illegally possessed prescription drugs during the arrest. The suspects are 18 year old Ramone Washington, 19 year old Devon Yang and 20 year old Jonathan Berlanga along with a fourth suspect, 19 year old Steve Brock. The investigation showed the shooting was in retaliation for a Facebook posting and a rant posted by the intended victim directed at the suspects.

The 10 day manhunt for a Wisconsin man charged with stealing firearms and silencers from a Janesville store is now over. Early this morning 32 year old Joseph Jakubowski was taken into custody after a Vernon County farmer alerted authorities of someone trespassing on his land. News 19's Caroline Hecker spent the day in Viola, about 12 miles east of Virgoua, and brings you the latest on the arrest. This all started when the landowner here, Jeffrey Gorn, was checking tree stands on his ATV. When he was up in a tree stand, he noticed a tarp out in the middle of one of his fields so he took that ATV to check out what it was. Once he got closer, he called out to whoever might be under there and what he got surprised him. According to Sheriff John Spears, Gorn is a retired therapist and told law enforcement he spoke with this man for at least 45 minutes asking him guestions. After leaving he called 911 and law enforcement told him to look at pictures of Jackubowski online and that's when he made a startling discovery. Sheriff Spears tells me he was shocked at the suspect's compliance when he was approached by the bearcat. And Gorn says had he known it was Jackubowski, he probably wouldn't have approached but at the time he didn't know. The biggest mystery remains how he got here. There's been no sign of transportation or if he had any accomplices. Twenty six agencies including 18 local, 3 state and 6 federal took part in Jackubowksi's arrest. More than 250 law enforcement officers helped out. Authorities say they found four handguns, 1 long gun, a Samari sword and multiple boxes of ammo when Jakubowski was taken into custody.

News 19's Caroline Hecker spent the day in court and brings you reaction from inside the courtroom. It was an extremely emotional day in court. It's been 758 days since the killing occurred but emotions are still raw. We heard testimony from several members of Kristen's family including her two daughters who are 11 and 10. Family and friends described Kristen as full of energy and spirit, and as someone always looking for a way to better herself for her children. Her family says she was well on her way with a new job in the works when her life was cut short. They describe Anderson as master manipulator who controlled her every move. Today for the first time we heard from Bryce Anderson. Anderson's aunt spoke on behalf of his mother, telling the court the Bryce she knows is caring, thoughtful and smart. However she made no excuse for his actions. Anderson will be nearly 67 years old when he is eligible for parole, Kristen's family obviously hoping for life behind bars. All of Kristen's siblings spoke today in court, but her younger sister said something I think resonated with the entire room. She said "Bryce Anderson had slowly been killing my sister for a long time, not just that morning." That alluded to the ongoing domestic violence, whether it be mentally,

A yearlong investigation by the Associated Press finds roughly 17,000 official reports of sexual assaults by students in K-12 schools over a four-year period. Those numbers are the most complete tally among the nation's 50 million K-12 students. Marina Hutchinson reports. Relying on information from State Education Departments and federal crime data, a yearlong investigation by the Associated Press uncovered about 17,000 official reports of sex assaults by students in K to 12 schools over a recent four-year period. The tally however is a decided undercount there are no requirements for schools to report such student violence and AP found states vary widely in how they classify it. Studies have long found bullying can be a precursor to sexual harassment and assault. Typically victims' grades drop, attendance falls, rates of depression, anxiety and suicidal thoughts increase. Psychologist Wilson Kenney who has helped develop student intervention programs in Oregon, says schools often think they don't have a problem. It happens in all types of schools to all types of children. In cases identified by the AP some administrators engaged in cover ups to hide evidence of a possible crime and protect their schools' image. Under federal education law public school districts are obligated to act on bullying and sexual violence. When schools mishandle such cases victims have the option to sue. Children remain most vulnerable to sexual assaults by other children in the privacy of a home but schools place second.

Supporters of an Onalaska woman and her daughter are trying to fight City Hall when it comes to free speech, but city officials say what they did amounts to defacing public property. The charges date back to April 16th when the woman and her teenage daughter used sidewalk chalk to write messages of racial equality on public sidewalks at the Great River Landing. Those writings included phrases such as Black Lives Matter, Stand Up for Muslims and You Are Welcome Here. Onalaska police ticket the two for graffiti and an invoice for restitution totaling nearly a thousand dollars. Yesterday the two pleaded not guilty in municipal court. Demonstrators showed up in support of Lori Lunney during her municipal court appearance. The City of Onalaska says the incident involved more than a thousand feet of drawings and messages in chalk and that the charges leveled have nothing to do with the content of those messages, rather the time it took city personnel to clean it, just about 7 hours according to the city administrator. Lori Lunney declined our request for an interview. The two are due back in court in August.

Three people face drug charges after what police are calling one of the largest methamphetamine seizures ever in La Crosse. Officers arrested 27 year old Sandy Xiong, 23 year old Michael Xiong and .29 year old Jess Meidema after a search of their hotel room on Copeland Avenue. Police got the search warrant after determining that Sandy Xiong was selling large amounts of meth both from her residence in Onalaska and at the hotel room. During the search officers found one and a half pounds of methamphetamine with a street value of around $60,000. They also found a ledger book listing drug sales in excess of $20,000 along with $2,700 in cash. Police say one of those arrested had their four month old child in the hotel room along with the drugs. The child is now in the care of protective services.

In 2015 a state appellate court rejected Koula's appeal for a new trial and now he's trying once again, filing a brief with La Crosse County last Friday to request a new trial. News 19's Caroline Hecker explains what's contained in the brief and why it could take a while before a ruling is made. Within the 77 page document Eric Koula maintains his innocence and alleges another family member is responsible for the killings. He writes about how he feels his trial attorneys failed him and accuses law enforcement officials of twisting facts in front of the jury. Typically when new trials are requested it is newly discovered evidence that can carry the most weight. Within the brief Koula does cite new evidence, saying a friend of his sister's has come to him with information she believes is not true. He also cites ineffective assistance of counsel and writes if he's granted a new trial he'll bring his trial lawyers to the stand. All of this is now up to Judge Scott Horne, who will review the brief and decide whether Koula's arguments are grounds for a hearing. But because he's choosing to represent himself it could prove a time consuming process. The key to presenting all the information, like ineffective council and new evidence, is to convince the judge the verdict in the original case would have been different as a result. Gill says that's the biggest hurdle most people have to overcome. As for the cost to taxpayers, since Koula is representing himself it really boils down to the man hours required by the county to read the brief, do legal research and respond, something, like Gill said, that could take a while. Koula's family has not spoken to him since the arrest.

A Trempealeau County man reached a plea agreement in Houston County for a stabbing which happened in La Crescent last year. Twenty seven year old Sean Kasten made a court appearance in Caledonia Minnesota today. Kasten was facing charges in connection with the stabbing of a woman, her child and his dog last June. That attack happened on Juniper Street in La Crescent. Kasten plead guilty to lesser charges in connection with the attack. Kasten's attorney says his client suffers from mental health issues and for that reason he pled not guilty to the more serious charges. Kasten was facing multiple charges earlier this year but two counts of attempted murder were dropped by prosecutors back in January. According to police reports, Kasten was in the passenger seat of a car traveling through La Crescent when he suddenly stabbed the female driver, her three year old daughter and even his own dog as they drove down Juniper Street. The report also says Kasten then stabbed himself causing serious injuries. Kasten is incarcerated at the Saint Peter Correctional Treatment Facility in Minnesota.

It's easy to take for granted the diversity of plants and animals living and growing near the Mississippi River but it takes some hard work to make sure those areas remain vibrant. A plant called reed canary grass is threatening to become an invasive species, crowding out other species. News 19s Alex Wasilenko tells you about an experiment that will help to restore hardwood forests. Canary grass is not something you think of as an invasive species because it is often for sale at landscaping and gardening centers, but the spread of canary grass has now invaded flood plains and this has become a problem for tree species and wildlife alike. The serene and peaceful floodplains along the Mississippi are slowly being taken over by a quiet and now invasive species that aren't allowing much other vegetation to sprout. And when Meredith says we she means they have all teamed up to help apply restoration treatments to certain areas of reed canary grass like along Highway 26 in La Crescent. The treatment suppresses the canary grass and allows for more trees and vegetation to grow. This in turn will bring new homes and habitats for wildlife which will always makes those migratory song birds sing. So what exactly is going to be planted? Meredith has dreams that the flat floodplain will sprout with nature's skyscrapers in no time. The regeneration of the floodplain forests in just over 10 years will most certainly be a destination spot for much more wildlife. There has already been roughly 2,000 bare root seedlings spread through the La Crescent floodplain on Highway 26. There were also 500 trees that were planted today alone. Meredith and I also discussed the stigma of floodplains being a dangerous place during flood season, but it is actually a great place to view wildlife and also sometimes kayak into during the late spring and summer months. The experiment is testing two different ways to reduce the reed canary grass. Researchers are also testing three different ways of growing young trees in treated areas.

Local elms and ash trees have been disappearing in the Coulee Region whether it is to the Dutch Elm disease or the Emerald Ash Borer, and the City of La Crosse is seeing this as a learning curve and are trying to stay ahead of the game by introducing new trees to local streets and boulevards. News 19's Alex Wasilenko joins us to discuss what hardy tree is coming to the area next. The City of La Crosse is anxious to find a tree that will be sustainable but at the same time will provide a seamless transition to the local scenery. They want a tree that will restore many benefits to the area such as the absorption of storm water run-off and keeping streets and sidewalks cool during those hot and humid days.

Well the city says look no further, they have decided on a new breed of elm trees called Patriot Elms. These new elms are nearly one hundred percent fool proof. Patriot Elms are a hardy tree that will thrive in this area because of their resistance to Dutch Elm disease. Dan and I have talked in the past about the local tree scene and he just wants to stress that if you are looking to replace a tree yourself, steer away from maple because the city's tree population consists of 40 to 45 percent maple. The city is uprooting between forty and forty five hundred ash trees. They have already cut down 3,000 of them locally and are replacing them right away. And for those who have just had a tree planted outside their home the City of La Crosse only asks you to water the trees daily.

A successful dairy farm was on display today at the Vernon County Dairy Breakfast. The Servais family farm in Stoddard was packed with hungry Wisconsinites looking to have a farm cooked breakfast. Hamburg Farm prepared a classic meal consisting of eggs, sausage pancakes and of course, cheese. Guests could learn about dairy from the Wisconsin Milk Marketing Board and Organic Valley. They also had a chance to get up close and personal with some farm animals at the petting zoo. The Monroe County Dairy Breakfast was also held today near Cashton and the La Crosse County Dairy Breakfast is Saturday June 17th in Bangor.

The final stages of site prep-work are finished for a 33 acre "Pollinator Prairie" near Hixon Forest with seeding taking place this afternoon. Volunteers from Wis Corps cleared the areas of materials that would hinder the seeds from spreading properly. Over 50 different species native to La Crosse County were planted. The prairie creates space for pollinators like monarch butterflies to thrive, space that is becoming less and less available. According to the forestry department only 1 tenth of one percent of native prairie land is left. After seeding begins a process of mowing and controlled burns over the span of the next few years.

Here's an aspect of climate change you may not have considered; it could lower the quality of your coffee. A new study published in Nature Plants finds that Ethiopia, the world's fifth-largest coffee producer, could lose a significant amount of suitable farming land by the end of this century because of climate change. With the combination of low rainfall and rising temperatures plus global warming climate change is also reducing coffee's quality. This happens when temperatures rise causing the coffee to ripen too fast and it doesn't develop flavor elements like acidity and sweetness, in other words, less flavorful beans.

Ben Brancel, Secretary of the Department of Agriculture, Trade and Consumer Protection, toured the Great Lakes Cheese plant in La Crosse. Wisconsin produces more than 3 billion pounds of cheese every year. The dairy industry contributes 43.4 billion dollars to Wisconsin's economy, making it more valuable than oranges to Florida or potatoes to Idaho. Brancel says the industry looks promising for up and coming farmers. Wisconsin produces nearly 26% of the nation's cheese and 14% of its overall milk production.

Slug: STATE OF CORN

As you know, rain is essential to crops but too much too often can drastically affect yields for corn and soybean. The volume of rain so far this year has made planting difficult for farmers in the area. News 19's Sam Shilts spoke with some farmers who say if it doesn't guit raining this much their crops could be in big trouble. In addition to massive rain events flooding and causing damage. The frequency of rain is causing issues, particularly in corn crops, by causing a loss of nitrogen in the soil. Without that nitrogen, come harvest time the yields could be a lot less. A wet spring continuing into summer is having some devastating effects. Planting on many corn and soy crops have been delayed, while other sections of the field have been completely drowned out, a financial frustration for farmers. Massive portions of fields like this one have become unusable. Others, already losing rows of corn and those that are growing may be severely stunted from a lack of nitrogen in the soil, all leading to the possibility of far less yield during harvest. The larger yields from last year's harvest drove down the price of corn, meaning a lower yield this year could leave a large gap that even insurance may not fully cover. Though it will be rough economically, they haven't given up yet. Another issue plaguing crops this year, some of the herbicides used to control the growth of weeds have either washed away or been rendered ineffective. Some of the unusable fields this year will still cost farmers money but instead of that money being spent on growing product they could sell it will be money spent removing extra weeds and trying to get it ready for next year. Western central Wisconsin hasn't been the only area affected negatively by rains. Farms across the tristate area have experienced challenges when it comes to this year's crops.

Unfortunately customers were more interested in keeping it cool and dry rather than venturing out to the fields. Jeff said those who did come out this year definitely got some of the best strawberries he has seen in the 40 plus years he has been farming.

We recently spoke with Onalaska Band Director Robbie Coe about this event, beginning with the meaning behind the dinner concert. The Big Band Ball has been going on for quite a long time. It started with Dawson Strutt, the previous band director to me. And it was an opportunity for our students to perform outside of our school setting. And so, it used to be at the American Legion in Onalaska. We just recently moved it to Cedar Creek to change venues. But really, it's an opportunity for students to perform outside of that school setting. It's kind of a fun night; just what jazz is all about, performing for community members, not just for that grade or school setting. The Big Band Ball is Saturday April 8th. It's at Cedar Creek in Onalaska from 5 until 10:30. Dinner is from 6 to 7. Tickets for dinner and music are $35 a person. Without dinner tickets are $5 for students and $10 for everyone else.

If ever there was a man from the most humble beginnings it would be Don Herr. This month's recipient of the Jefferson Award, like others before him, does a lot with a little. But it's also the things you don't see that are gaining him a lot of recognition. If you live in Cataract Wisconsin chances are you know Don Herr. Don grew up dirt poor in a family that endured a lot of hard ships. But despite not having much, the family always helped others. And one night the couple made room for not one, but 4 more. Don's magical touches can be seen all over Cataract, where he has helped restore and rebuild just about everything. Having spent decades in Army National Guard, Don takes local students to the cemetery on Memorial Day to put flags on the gravesite of soldiers. Don knows how to stretch a dollar. For kids who can't afford Boy Scout camp. He takes them on and their own trip. This year, he's got something else planned. But his biggest feat is starting the area's first responder service. Thirty five years ago Don recruited volunteers and they trained in all sorts of scenarios that could happen. In a farming community they've saved countless lives. Volunteering is a way of life for Don and always will be; a face that to many in the Cataract area is a source of comfort, security and great compassion.

Honda Motorwerks today made a donation to an area sustainability initiative, giving an electric vehicle to help a program that turns food waste into fertilizer. News 19's Sam Shilts joins us now to tell us about the "Worm Mobile". What it's being used for? The worm mobile functions as a transport, a collaborative effort between Hillview Agriculture Center, Mayo Clinic and UW-La Crosse works to take food waste from the area and bring it to a compost center that uses worms to turn it into fertilizer. A donation today for a sustainability program now 7 years in the making, Honda Motorwerks gave this neighborhood electrical vehicle to the Vermicompost Center on Mayo Clinic's Campus. Over the past 7 years, they have taken 47,000 tons of food waste from Mayo Clinic, UW-L and Western and turned that into 10,000 tons of fertilizer, using worms that program keeps food waste out of the landfill and puts it back in area gardens to grow more. Before the affectionately named 'Worm Mobile', student volunteers used their own cars to transport food waste. With this new electric vehicle, more students can save on gas while keeping waste out of the landfill. One more thing many involved are excited about; each vehicle used to transport the food waste was usually a regular combustion car. Since the worm mobile is electric, it reduces that carbon footprint aligning more-so with the sustainability efforts that the Vermicompost Center works toward.

The city closed Memorial Pool in May of last year due to the deterioration of the 78 year old facility and the cost to fix it. A neighborhood group soon formed to try to save the pool and the City Council this week will review its options. As News 19's Caroline Hecker tells you the public will have the chance to speak out. As the city searches for funding, the City of La Crosse says it recognizes the need for another pool facility but like most ideas, how to pay for it remains unclear. Members of the Memorial Pool Committee who stand in favor of a new pool at the current site say city pools offer children the opportunity to learn a life skill. Sue Bulk has taught swimming lessons for 30 years and says the ability to easily access a pool is critical the surrounding community. On Wednesday the public will weigh in on five options; an addition to the current Erickson Pool, two concepts for the current site of Memorial Pool, an outdoor facility at Forest Hills and an indoor pool facility. The options carry price tags ranging from 4 to 12 million dollars, but supporters of the Memorial Pool site say the right choice is clear. The city says figuring out how to fund the project is an ongoing discussion. The city will evaluate more than 100 million dollars' worth of projects and widdle it down to around 5 million dollars' worth for 2018. And with the price tag of at least 4 million dollars for a new pool alone, the city anticipates a referendum on the issue sometime in the future. The public input session is Wednesday from 11 to 1 and again from 6:30 to 8:30 on the third floor of City Hall.

Slug: MISS REMARK2017

It's almost once again time for the Third Annual Miss Remarkable pageant in La Crosse. It's a project put on by Riverfront, an organization that serves people with disabilities. News 19's Heather Armstrong introduces you to Miss Remarkable 2016, who is reflecting on the year and using her experience to inspire others. Renee Cappetto is one of those people who light up a room when she walks in. She is kind, funny and appreciates the simple things. Last year Renee was selected to represent Riverfront in their mission to show the community the value in our friends and family with disabilities and how despite the many challenges they face, they always keep striving. The only thing Renee Cappetto loves more than her dog is her crown. Last year Renee was give the crown when she was selected Riverfront's third Miss Remarkable, a pageant that gives women facing challenges a chance to shine. Dissociative disorder is when a person creates multiple identities. In Renee's case those identities helped her deal with decades of extreme mental, physical and sexual abuse. She told me that she finally accepts that about herself. Renee's room in a group home in Shelby Hills is decorated to remind her of her struggle. The Miss Remarkable title holder serves as a Riverfront Ambassador, reminding the public that women everywhere with disabilities matter and if you've lived through abuse you still have worth. Renee turns 53 in July and her dream is to be a counselor for 4 young women who live at the Harvey House Group Home in La Crosse. The Miss Remarkable pageant is open to woman 13 and older. The event impacts the lives of every contestant and their families long after the curtain closes. The women learn interview and confidence building skills and are treated to a beauty day by Sue Kolve's Salon before they strut their stuff on stage and every contestant is awarded a specialized title.

It's a milestone birthday celebration for one of Wisconsin's most famous sons. The sites he designed across the state and around the world will mark the 150th birthday of architect Frank Lloyd Wright. Wright's birthplace, Richland Center, is among those with a claim to his design heritage. Although not as prominent as some of his other works the AD German Warehouse is hosting a weekend full of events highlighting its historical significance in Wright's canon of work. You can learn more about the warehouse by tuning into Daybreak Thursday. We'll have a special report called "The Wright Time" to mark the architect's 150th birthday. And if you're looking for a weekend getaway close to home Richland Center is a little more than an hour's drive from La Crosse. The AD German Warehouse is open from 11 to 3 on Sunday. A La Crosse park is already named in his honor but this week a statue will add to that, commemorating almost 40-years of mentoring students at La Crosse Central High School. The park at 16th and Cass is named for Walter "Babe" Weigent, a teacher, coach and athletic director at Central. He served the district from 1933 to 1970 making him the longest serving teacher and coach in Central history. A local group organized a fundraiser to commission the statue which is set to arrive sometime this week. You'll see the statue in the northeast corner of the park, right at 16th and Cass. The official statue dedication ceremony is July 7th at 4:30. You may know Weigent Park is the former site of what's referred to as Old Central. That's where the high school was located before a new Central was built in 1968 at Losey and Green Bay Streets.

It almost sounds made up, but Stephanie Stephens has a disease that she describes as one of those old wooden dolls with the strings holding it together and you press the button and everything collapses. That's what life is like on a daily basis for Stephanie. She never knows when her disease will strike. Despite that she runs her business Brilliant Body Works in Onalaska and donates her time and talents to just about every charitable cause imaginable. Stephanie Stevens says the help her family received when she was born with a rare genetic disease set the course of her life. They were never asked to pay back anything but we were told we could pay it forward. Stephanie is co-owner of Brilliant Body Works in Onalaska and while on the outside, she looks like she's got it all together things can fall apart quickly, literally. People with Ehler's Danlos Disease have very flexible joints that can hyper extend or break at any moment. Throughout some of the tough times Stephanie stepped back from volunteering with some of her favorite charities but soon realized that volunteering was exactly what she needed to feel better. The brave rebel warrior inside Stephanie Stevens is exactly the edge and drive that helps her raise money for cancer research, collect food and school supplies for local students or fundraise for aids awareness. The list goes on, but whatever Stephanie is doing she is happy, something she found in the place she least expected. Stephanie is one busy lady but she says she does have days where she feels like having a pity party so she calls her husband Adam, gets it off her chest and then moves on. A new regulation on pawnbrokers and second hand article dealers is set to go to a full city council vote next Thursday. That ordinance would require certain record keeping practices and sharing details of those records with police. News 19's Sam Shilts is here with details on why some second hand dealers are concerned about how that would affect them. This ordinance would require the majority of stores dealing in second hand merchandise to report detailed inventories to an online database. That database in turn helps police locate reportedly stolen items. State statutes already require these dealers to keep records on items and sellers. However it's only required by paper and for a somewhat outdated list of valuable items. The issue is that the ordinance would also require this of area antique dealers, many of whom are concerned that the requirements would negatively affect their businesses. Area pawnbrokers typically buy and sell their items as one entity but Scott told me the Antiques Center is a little more complex and has 35 separate dealers selling from one location, each of whom may have to do their own reporting of inventory and sellers to stay on the right side of the law. And while they do agree with why the police want this ordinance to pass they're hoping the council adopts a less strict version. Should that come to pass violations of the ordinance could lead to a loss of licensure. The J & A Committee was split on this issue last Tuesday. It will go before the full city council on Thursday of next week

But ABC's Rebecca Jarvis tells you why despite that more than half a million taxpayers still their identities and refunds had been stolen. It doesn't take much for a scammer to take advantage of unsuspecting taxpayers. Having your name, date of birth and social security number is about all it takes. And despite aggressive efforts by the IRS to stop these thieves, hundreds of thousands of us will again fall victim. Every year, the IRS warns taxpayers to be on guard for scams, especially during tax season. At the top of their list; phone scams, criminals posing as IRS agents threatening you with financial risk, police arrest, even deportation. Next, phishing; sketchy e-mails or websites designed to steal your personal information. And then, fake tax preparers who set up shop just to perpetrate refund fraud and identity theft. Make sure to never give away your personal information over the phone or internet and if you receive an unusual or threatening call just hang up. Even if you receive an e-mail that looks like it's from your bank or the IRS, double check with them first to make sure it's legitimate before providing any personal information.

SIUD: TAXES THUR

We begin a series of stories designed to help with some last minute tax issues: tonight, your children and deductions. ABC's Rebecca Jarvis explains. Whether you have one child or a whole brood, there are three really important tax benefits that every parent should take advantage of, and the third: expenses for child-care. Taxpayers who pay for child-care while working or looking for work can deduct a portion of those costs for children under age 13. There are also education benefits there to help defray the cost of higher education. So if you have more than one child in college this credit is good for multiples. The LLC works for those pursuing job enhancing skills. Courses must be taken at an eligible educational institution but there is no limit on the number of years you can claim the credit. Then there is the tuition and fees deduction which can reduce your taxable income by up to $4000. It's important to understand which expenses are eligible and which are not. Things like tuition and books are ok, but paying for that plane ticket to send your child home, no. If you're adopting a child you can claim up to $13,000 in expenses in the year you incur the costs even if the adoption is finalized the following year. And if that child has special needs you're eligible for the full amount even if you didn't spend that much. And finally, one in five families that qualify for the Earned Income Tax Credit does not claim it. It's a rich benefit that can make a big difference. Also, explore if your employer offers a "flexible spending account" for child-care that can be good for up to $5,000 pre-tax dollars. But bear in mind, you can't double dip, pay for child-care from that flex account and then deduct those expenses.

Slug: TAX TIPS FRIDAY Millions of Americans have more than one job. So, it's not uncommon. ABC's Rebecca Jarvis has information if you fall into this category. Whether your side gig is for a rainy day fund or more like an ac formation if you fall into this category. Whether your side gig is for a rainy day fund or more like an addition to a full-time career, Uncle Sam is going to want his share. What a lot of people seem to forgetis that you've got to pay taxes on that income. If you're working that second-shift for a business, it's pretty simple: your employer will deduct withholding taxes from your paycheck. But things can get complicated quickly if you're self-employed, running a business from your home or working in cash heavy careers like bartending. However, there are some serious tax advantages for self-earners, including a whole host of deductions. Among the most common: portion of your home used, think about that home office, mileage of your car used, especially if you're driving for Uber or LYFT, tools and equipment, even tuition for related education. Be advised: if you rent out your home for more than 14 days you could fall into that landlord category. Checking your local laws and regulations is a must. Just a reminder, taxes are due Tuesday the 18th this year instead of April 15th. The weekend and Emancipation Day Monday are resulting in a little extra time.

Forty six million Americans are age 65 or older and more and more, they continue to work well past the traditional retirement age. Nearly a quarter of senior men and about 15% of women remain in the labor force, but those filers may find filing their tax returns a little more complicated. ABC's Rebecca Jarvis explains why. In 2016, baby boomers aged 52 to 70 are either planning for retirement, beginning their retirement or fully into retirement. And with each of those markers, there are tax incentives to consider. If you're retired and your only income is social security your benefits may not be taxable. And some retirees might not even need to file. But if you receive income from other sources--a pension, your retirement plan or a job--it's likely you'll have to pay up. If you're working for a business--your employer will withdraw taxes from your paycheck. But if you're self-employed, you are responsible for the taxes on that income and if you have a retirement plan. For seniors with questions about filing their 2016 taxes check out IRS Publication 554, "The 2016 Tax Guide for Seniors."

Despite the extra time to file taxes this year many will not make tonight's midnight deadline. If you are one of those people don't worry just yet. With more than 150 million Americans rushing to file their tax returns it probably comes as no surprise that millions and millions of us aren't close to being ready. And this year, we even get a few extra days to crunch those numbers. The filing deadline gets pushed back making Tuesday, April 18th, the last day to file on time. So, with that deadline looming, what's a taxpayer to do? Filing your return is the best way to go, the penalties for non-filing or late filing and late payment. However there is another option. If you owe try to pay as much as you can as soon as you can. That will stop any fees as well as those painful penalties. There are several simple ways to do so, including paying online, by phone, by check or even using your personal credit card. On the other hand, if you happen to be one of the lucky ones getting money back, with that in mind, the IRS is sitting on about one billion dollars in unclaimed refunds. Taxpayers have three years from the time the tax is due to claim one, so April 18th is the last day taxpayers can receive a refund from the 2013 tax year. Again the deadline to file is midnight.

But the industries relying on those skilled trades are struggling to find enough qualified people to meet that demand. News 19's Sam Shilts spoke with an area construction company to find out how that shortage is affecting them and what they plan to do about it. Demand for skilled trades like carpentry continues to climb. Interest in those trades however is struggling to keep up with that demand. In the midst of a building boom there are plenty of projects to go around, but if companies like Heartland can't generate interest that puts them in a tough spot. So the trades now have to make appeals to that younger generation, one of which is financial. That trend seems to be continuing. Right now the average starting pay for carpentry in Wisconsin is just over $13 an hour, with the median hovering just over $21. But some say more demand could push that even higher, with partnerships and school involvement helping some discover the trades. There is hope on the horizon but for now it's an uphill battle. Most skilled trades are in high demand. Builders mentioned another hurdle is interest level among women in the trades. Heartland Construction says they only had one woman last summer and haven't had another female applicant since, something they're hoping to change.

A tariff placed on Canadian lumber has some homebuilders concerned that could cause the price of homes to go up. The average tariff of 20% on Canadian soft woods was placed by the Trump administration on Wednesday in response to a change in Canadian dairy policy that the President said was hurting US dairy producers. News 19's Sam Shilts spoke with La Crosse Area Builders to find out how this affects them. A new tariff has some homebuilders a little frustrated. By creating uncertainty in pricing a tariff on Canadian softwood lumber will cost an average of 20% on imports, the result of a trade dispute between the US and Canadian government. In short, the prices of homes may go up, some estimate anywhere between $3,000 to $7,000 on average, which may sound like a lot but the average home in Wisconsin costs over 160,000 dollars. At Kratt Lumber like most, tariffs dealing with Canadian softwoods have come and gone over the years and they say this is just another part of the game so they say the best way to deal with it is to keep doing what they've been doing for these buyers and builders. The tariff isn't necessarily a good thing, but it's nothing they haven't seen before. Though many home builders are concerned with the tariff some Wisconsin loggers praised it saying that it makes it easier for them to remain competitive with Canadian lumber firms.

For the surrounding Lansing area this family owned grocery store is the only one for miles in each direction but for those on the Wisconsin side of the Mississippi what was once a 5 minute drive is now over an hour, with Highway 82 closing due to a devastating washout that claimed the life of an Iowa man. 2:40 Slug: LAWYER PAY

The constitution guarantees everyone accused of a crime the right to an attorney to represent them. Those who can't afford one get one free. But a growing number of attorneys are warning that a low pay rate from the state to private attorneys called on to represent clients who cannot afford an attorney threatens that constitutional right. A group of Wisconsin lawyers are hoping to increase the pay rate. Last week the group filed a petition with the Wisconsin Supreme Court seeking to increase the hourly rate from $40 to $100 an hour. News 19's Caroline Hecker spoke with an attorney who no longer takes on these cases due to the financial burden and explains the long lasting effect the low hourly rate can have on our community. Wisconsin's $40 an hour rate is the lowest in the country. It hasn't changed since 1978 and if you adjust to inflation the rate should be $155 an hour today. But the debate goes far beyond a simple paycheck. Imagine working in 1978 for $40 an hour and nearly forty years later still making that same $40. That's the position many private attorneys who take public defender cases are in across the State of Wisconsin. Veenstra is one of dozens of attorneys who no longer accept these cases. The problem is one that's become more pronounced in recent years. Circuit Court Judge Scott Horne says the effects can be felt across the justice system. The fewer private attorneys willing to take these cases begs the question, will the effectiveness of council suffer? Defendants in custody waiting for an attorney take up space in the jail which can contribute to overcrowding. It's a financial burden passed on to taxpayers, one attorneys like Veenstra say can be easily avoided by increasing the hourly rate. If the Supreme Court rules on a new hourly wage its still up to the legislature to decide to fund that new wage. Judge Horne says it's not uncommon for the La Crosse County Public Defender's office to recruit attorneys from Madison, Eau Claire and surrounding areas to take on cases here. Retired Judge Pasell says when cases are continued because defendants don't have an attorney. It can be especially hard on victims who are often eager to get their cases wrapped up guickly. A 2010 petition to the State Supreme Court ended with the court declining to mandate a rate increase to $80 per hour. The court said the decision was a "shared authority" between itself and the legislature.

Every year the Corps of Engineers, a federal agency, dredges sand from the Mississippi River. Removing the sand maintains a 9-foot deep channel to accommodate barge traffic, but all that sand has to go someplace and the government has run out of places to put it. News 19s Mackenzie Amundsen tells you about a new plan to turn farmland in Wabasha and Buffalo Counties into future sand storage sites and why that plan is meeting with resistance from the owners of that farmland. The Corps estimates dredging nearly 11-million cubic yards of sand in the next 40 years; they say acquiring land from five family-owned farms along the Mississippi will open up the space they need to store that sand. Four other farm owners in the area got the same package containing a dredged material management plan from the Corps of Engineers. Weisenbeck and the other farmers were pre-selected to lose farm land for the development of permanent sand storage. So do the Drysdales, who've been on their land more than 4 generations. The Corps says the land was chosen for specific reasons and they are open to alternatives. The plan is in review. If finalized the US Army Corps could acquire the land through eminent domain. US Senators AI Franken and Tammy Baldwin urge the Corps to find an alternative to invoking this constitutional privilege stating "these farms have been family-owned for generations and we urge you to consider the impact eminent domain will have on their livelihood and the economies of surrounding communities". As the plan continues to progress those involved say it's not just about a handful of farmers. The impact of this decision could have a wide reach Drysdale would lose the most land in the plan at 298 acres. Weisenbeck would lose 92 acres. The Corps held the second of two public meetings discussing the plan last night. Evans says they have heard alternatives from barging the sand to another location to using other unproductive land for the storage. Though they appreciate the suggestions Evans says a number have been ruled out because of high costs. The Corps will continue to accept written suggestions through midnight of next Friday June 23. The Corps will then evaluate the suggestions before finalizing this plan or developing a new one.

To emphasize, this warning does not affect those who use the city water supply. The La Crosse County Health Department issued a health advisory today. News 19s Mackenzie Amundsen tells you the health risks of the water contamination. La Crosse County health officials say they found clusters of private wells with contaminated water during annual water testing. They say the water contamination is the result of bacteria and nitrate build up for over a decade. Health officials say traces of nitrate are evident in normal drinking water but some of the groundwater tested in the private wells had dangerously high nitrate levels. High nitrate levels could cause birth defects and the rare "blue baby syndrome", lowering oxygen levels in blood for infants. Jen Rombalski, Health Director for La Crosse County, says the contamination does not impact public drinking water. Rombalski says water contamination comes from many sources including fertilizers, waste disposal, faulty septic systems and changes in land. She says residents in those areas should use bottled water for drinking and cooking or boil it to kill bacteria. There is no easy solution to removing these contaminants; it may be a long term problem. She advises every private well owner to test the water every year. Senator Jennifer Shilling released a statement on the water contamination saying water quality has gone down because of reduced enforcement by the state. She says the problems are in her words "getting worse as major violations are being ignored and swept under the rug".

Sudden Infant Death Syndrome, or ' SIDS', is the leading cause of death among infants in the US between the ages of one month and one year. The CDC says more than 3,000 infants die unexpectedly in their sleep each year but that number can be drastically reduced with what doctors call the ' ABC' s' of sleep. The "A" stand for "alone", meaning no toys or blankets should be in the crib. They're potential suffocation hazards. Next, babies are less likely to get their face stuck on the mattress or the side of the bed if they are lying on their back, the "B" in that acronym. And babies should be in a crib, never sleeping in a parent's bed where there is a higher risk of suffocation. While transitioning your baby from a bassinet to their own bed can be hard it works out best for both children and parents. Giuliano suggests investing in a baby monitor that has audio and video to best keep a watchful eye and ear babies while they sleep in their own room.

Slug: RISKY

La Crosse's changing the culture of risky drinking coalition hosted a regional conference today. Elected officials and regional leaders shared their perspective on alcohol policy changes. News 19's Tianna Vanderhei gives you a glimpse at how things have changed and what the coalition still hopes to accomplish. While it's difficult to rate the success of any prevention program the changing the culture of risky drinking coalition in La Crosse has confidence their efforts are working. Kondracki stresses those situations are now far and few thanks in large to the synergy of the community as a result of a roughly 1-million dollar grant they received in 2007. Those funds came from the Medical College of Wisconsin, helping to leverage resources such as drinking awareness courses, bartender training and programs like River Watch. So where do you go from here? Continuing to work hard, and address the on-going problems risky drinking creates. The coalition's Parents who Host Lose the Most, targeting underage drinking is going on right now. If you'd like to receive a yard sign you can contact Courtney Springer at the email on your screen. Those signs will be up through prom and graduation-party season this summer.

Nursing occupations have the lowest unemployment rates in the US and the profession is expected to grow, doubling by 2024. Now a new survey shows Wisconsin is the best place for that growth. According to personal finance website Wallethub, the state ranks number one in the country for personal and professional success of nurses based on 18 key metrics, such as salary, openings, hours and work environment. Other Midwestern states placed high on the list with Iowa ranking number 3 and Minnesota coming in at number 11.

That's one reason for the Community Drug Forum May 15th. It's a discussion about the problem along with education and resources for those who need it. The resources really are staff, from different treatment agencies, staff from agencies dealing in prevention, recovery and support. They'll be available off to the side beginning at 5-pm. So, an hour before the event, those individuals are welcome to come in and talk with these individuals to see how they might be able to get help for a loved one, perhaps, help for themselves, and part of the conversation coming up at the community drug forum if you're looking for help. Those resources talked about are available beginning at 5 o'clock, one hour before the forum at the Stoney Creek Inn in Onalaska. The forum gets underway at 6 and runs until 8:30. The evening includes a demonstration known as the Wake-Up Call from the Lybert Family, whose son Tyler began experimenting with drugs as early as 6th grade. They'll talk about the warning signs around the home, indicating that a family member may be in trouble.

A recent outbreak of measles in Minnesota affected more than 40 children in recent weeks. Health officials say those kids were not vaccinated. Measles is a preventable disease that has proven deadly in the past and is just the latest in resurgence of diseases nearly eradicated in the US. But it's making a comeback because too few are getting vaccinated. In America the vaccination rates are as high as 90% for many childhood diseases. But these pockets of under-vaccination are growing. Health officials say some of the causes include fear of vaccines and misinformation about safety.

Slug: BRAIN INJURY

An Onalaska man is using an unconventional method to deal with a traumatic brain injury. TBI's are a major cause of death and disability in the United States, the Centers for Disease Control blaming them for about 30% of all injury deaths each year. News 19's Tianna Vanderhei shares the story of a TBI survivor who finds support in others and in artwork. Unmasking Brain Injury is an international project that aims to spread awareness of the suffering through paint, supplying people with blank white masks to decorate as they so choose, in turn providing an outlet for individuals like Onalaska resident Steven Brown to share their story and express their emotions. It was eight-thirty in the morning March seventh of 2005. Brown at 18-years-old was running an errand when he was involved in a head on collision on Highway 16. Brown says he remembers going to bed the night before and when he woke up it was July 25th. That's when his mom handed him the newspaper, unconscious for two and a half months, breaking about 50 bones in his jaw and undergoing two brain surgeries. Now he finds support in a traumatic brain injury group that meets once a month at Gundersen, painting a mask to showcase, the positive rather than the negative, striving to add a little more color to life in the face of hardship. Brown says the man who hit him served about 11 years in prison and there's still no contact between them. But he stresses that if he could he would actually like to meet with him to tell him he forgives him, adding that before the accident he smoked heavily, drank and was on a downward spiral. When he awoke from his coma he wanted nothing to do with either. His mask represents who he was before his accident and who he is now; with the maze depicting the journey he took to relearn how to walk, talk and who he is now. Brown's mask currently featured on the unmasking brain injury website. This is only the second time for the painting activity. The masks were donated by the Brain Injury Alliance of Minnesota.

Spring is always a welcome change of season but with it comes something not so welcome, ticks, specifically the deer tick which transmits most of the tick borne illnesses, for example Lyme disease. But you might not know as much about the Powassan virus, named for the Canadian town in which it was discovered in 1958. So why are we hearing more about it now? We spoke with a couple of experts for the answer. Dave Geske works for the health department. Part of his job is studying and monitoring mosquito and tick borne disease including the Powassan virus carried by the deer tick. And that's one reason you may hear more about it. But it's important to keep that statistic in perspective. Doctor Agger says unfortunately it's a serious viral infection. Geske says Powassan is related to West Nile, carried by a mosquito and as we've heard many people infected with West Nile don't become ill. So is that the case with Powassin? Geske says prevention is key; use a repellant containing DEET on your clothing and make sure to check yourself for ticks when you return from the woods. Doctor Agger agrees. A repellant with DEET on your clothing if you're in the woods is a good idea. He says it works well for Lyme disease; a bacteria. But how well it works to repel a virus like Powassan is not known because not enough research has been accomplished. Doctor Agger says this is a disease that calls for more public health research. That may be true with treatment as well because right now Agger describes the treatment as nursing support because there is no good anti-viral medication for Powassan.

Slug: FRUIT JUICE

The American Academy of Pediatrics has new guidelines for children and fruit juices which could force a change in children's' menus. The Academy says fruit juice should be limited for children and for the very young it should be avoided all together. Children under the age of one should not be given fruit juice unless a doctor says it is okay according to new guidelines from the American Academy of Pediatrics. The group had previously advised that parents wait until the age of six months to give their children fruit juice but changed their recommendations out of concerns about rising obesity rates and tooth decay. Children and teens are the top consumers of juice and juice drinks in the US, according to the Academy. But drinking fruit juice all day can cause cavities and put children at risk for excessive weight gain. The Academy also recommends that parents limit fruit juices to no more than four ounces a day for children between the ages of one and three. They say it should be 100% fresh or reconstituted juice and it should be given in a cup, not a bottle or a box. A maximum of six ounces of fruit juice a day is now recommended for kids between the ages of four and six and for those between seven and 18, no more than eight ounces daily. The co-author of the Academy's policy statement said they want to encourage children to learn to eat fruit rather than drink fruit juice. This is the first change the group has made to fruit juice recommendations since 2001.

Slug: POTENT POTABLE

Take a minute and ask yourself, when's the last time you had an alcoholic drink. Last weekend? Last night? Are you drinking right now? It should come as no surprise that people in Wisconsin drink a lot. New statistics show that women especially are drinking more than ever before. News 19s Brittany Lake explains the local data and looks at how marketing may be playing a role. The drinking culture is seeping into our society. The US drinks the most wine in the world and the market in the Midwest is gaining momentum. In the last 17 years Wisconsin wineries have grown tenfold. The growing demand is good for business, the trend taking off makes this winery ripe for the picking. And while some people believe 1 glass of wine a day is good for you there's a fine line between healthy habits and a potent potable. You've probably heard that Wisconsin is the biggest binge drinking state in the country. 24% of adults in the state report binge drinking. In La Crosse County, that number is 26%. And ladies, we're binge drinking even more at 36%. So it's no surprise that people are drinking more than they used to. What may surprise you is the result. According to a Washington Post analysis, white women between the ages of 35 and 54 are dying from alcohol twice as much as they were 18 years ago. Excessive alcohol consumption, or binge drinking is playing a part but what exactly does that look like? That's 2/3 of a bottle of wine, a drink quickly becoming ever more popular. And it might not be a coincidence that as the wine industry thrives, Wisconsinites have a growing thirst. So how did these tasty tannins increase so much in popularity? It's similar to the question of what came first the chicken or the egg. But is that product actually solving the problem or creating a new one? If you look back at our increasing binge drinking statistic you might find the answer. So what if you don't want to become a statistic? It can be done. Theresa Helgeson has been sober for nearly 25 years. She works as a clinical coordinator at the Family and Children's' Center and is raising 3 teenagers. But it doesn't come easy, social outings of wineries and bar hopping now consist of baseball and softball games. Just another example of how ingrained drinking has become in our culture. So what do the experts think is the reason behind so many women turning to wine? Local experts say the first way to stop the cycle of abusing alcohol is to educate and inform people of the damage it can do. While more than 2 decades sober doesn't have to be your goal, it might be wise to watch how much you drink when you whet your whistle. To clarify moderate drinking is defined as one drink a day for women, two for men. And some research suggests that moderate drinking may have health benefits. But binge drinking does not. Locally, the Coulee Council on Addictions is a resource for people battling addiction and alcoholism. The council is in the process of finding the funding for a new recovery center in La Crosse, something they hope to break ground on by this fall.

But despite that the DOJ says less than 100 have been tested. This backlog is raising questions. In Eau Claire for example there are 144 sexual assault kits in storage. The kits are sometimes not tested for a number of reasons, among them a victim may have declined to cooperate with prosecutors. It is fish distribution and egg taking season for many different species. What does that mean? At the station in Genoa they're busy adhering to eggs gathered in the fall and young fish in order to ensure they grow to a healthy level to be released. Protecting and restoring threatened, endangered and native fish species is a top priority for the US Fish and Wildlife Service. Doug Aloisi, manager at the Genoa National Fish Hatchery, says the lake herring species is one in particular that has diminished since the early 1900's, transporting about half of the 100,000 total lake herring at the station to see how they handle the environmental change rather than compromising the adult fish. While this is the first year the Genoa Station has raised lake herring they're hoping to continue learning and sharing that knowledge to help other conservation agencies and the general public According to the National Fish Hatchery the monetary contribution of these programs, total three point six billion dollars to the US economy each year. When comparing that revenue to one of a Fortune Five Hundred company it would rank the fishery programs at forty-one, right behind CVS Pharmacies and Verizon and ahead of Kraft. There's more than 100,000 small lake herring in the isolation facility right now. The hatchery will transport 50,000 of those to the Great Lakes early tomorrow morning.

The sun's out and it's officially fishing season in Wisconsin. According to the DNR hundreds of thousands of people are expected to cast a line. Reporter Brianna Hollis has more on the excitement, excited because the lake's quiet boat landings are now the city's hot spot. Georgy Purdy may only be 16 year's old, but he's no stranger to the reel or the water, getting into the action because of his family's passion for fishing. Though it's typically a laid-back experience there are several rules you need to consider when you're out on the water. And the DNR has added new regulations this year aimed to maintain fish numbers, provide different types of fishing experiences, control fish populations and make access to fishing as fair as possible. Back on the boat Purdy knows what he's doing. So he can focus on the fun and trying to one-up an epic story from last year's fishing season. Whether it's laughing it off or reelin' the big ones in he's passionate about the sport.

Since school is almost out, you may be looking to get your kids involved in summer camps around the Coulee Region. It doesn't take a big commitment either as most of the camps keep in mind your busy summer schedule. News 19's Alex Wasilenko joins us now with information on some of the top summer camps that even include activities for teens. The warmer temperatures are finally here and the final bell classes are almost over for the summer, but it is not too early to start thinking about all the summer programs that La Crosse has to offer for ages 5 up to 15. The La Crosse Wellness Center is hosting the Coulee Kids Summer Camp and registration is ongoing. There are different themed weeks from sports, to adventure and even a summer Olympics week. And for those busy parents there is an early drop off time at 730 am and a late pick up time as well at 530 pm. All age groups will be keeping pretty busy. As far as costs are concerned you can pay for a single week or you can sign up and pay for multiple weeks if your kids are interested in two or more of the themes. If you have yet to register you better hurry because spots are filling up quickly. Each themed week has a cap of 30 kids, so you might want to make sure to have a back-up plan in case your child's favorite program is already full.

The fastest growing high school sport in America doesn't involve a ball or a stick but rather a gun. Trap shooting's popularity is soaring and that's the case for the La Crosse Central-Logan team that formed last year and has doubled in size already. News 19's Nick Tabbert tells you why setting goals and hitting targets is all the rage. Max early knows how to knock down a target but it's shooting alongside his classmates that excite him these days. On Monday nights this spring Max and 45 other La Crosse students are sharing their passion at the Chaseburg Rod and Gun Club, competing against each other and themselves in a safe and supportive environment. The team's goal is to win a state championship, but Woods says he ultimately wants his students to become better sportsmen. It appears the club is in good hands with teams forming and expanding across the country. The next generation of sportsmen is here and ready to shatter the way we think of sports in high school. Nearly 1,500 students from 65 schools across Wisconsin are shooting this season. The Central-Logan team has completed three nights of competition. Slug: BIKE TRAIL

There was a dedication today for the Old River Road Trail in Dresbach after a four year reconstruction project. News 19's Sam Shilts was at that dedication this morning and joins us now with details on that project. The three mile trail is a reconstruction of the Old Highway 61 Trail which, before that reconstruction, was in pretty rough shape. The bike trail runs parallel to I-90 between the Dresbach Travel Information Center and the Dresbach Interchange to the north, and functions as part of the Mississippi River Trail which spans more than 3,000 miles. The project cost a little over a million dollars. A partnership between Winona County, Dresbach, La Crescent and MN-DOT will tackle maintenance for the next 20 years. After the dedication those in attendance broke in the new trail with 7, 14, and 18 mile bike rides. Those involved hope this will encourage more to enjoy the beauty along this stretch of the Mississippi. The paved portion of the trail is a small segment of what used to be the Old US Highway 61, a roadway referenced in Bob Dylan's 1965 album "Highway 61 Revisited" which included the hit song, Like a Rolling Stone.

On and off the track Dana and Doug have always been close, but running has made them inseparable. The sophomores train together during the season and throughout the summer, logging up to 55 miles per week together on their favorite paths in Trempealeau County. The two also take to the line as competitors, running against each other in a combined 3200 meter race at smaller meets. In their latest battle, Doug pulled ahead to win late. They're both just completely supportive of each other. It's fun to watch their interactions. And they support one another from the sidelines. When Dana won the Division 2 Girl's State Cross Country title last fall, her brother was the first once to greet her at the finish line. Both Feyens have ambitious goals for the remainder of this track season and when they're done they'll return to the backroads of Trempealeau County to prepare for next season, stride for stride, pushing each other. High water on the Mississippi River will likely mean less boat traffic this Memorial Day weekend. For that reason the La Crosse County Sheriff's Department won't have a river patrol on the water. However for anyone still planning to go out they urge you to take extra care. The National Weather Service predicts the river will remain slightly above flood stage through the weekend. While it's over 10 feet, all areas near privately owned developed shorelines are slow no wake zones. Higher water also brings debris that can be difficult to see and damaging to water craft. Other things to keep in mind; a personal floatation device is required for each person on a boat, be aware of your boat's weight limit and all boats with enclosed cabins or lengths of over 16 feet are required to have fire extinguishers on board.

Slug: SUMMER SAFETY

The Memorial Day weekend is the unofficial start of summer for many, but with the start of warmer weather and outdoor activities comes some things to keep in mind. News 19's Sam Shilts has some tips for staying safe this summer. Spring is on its way out, which means it's time to break out the bikes, the boats and head outdoors for some summer fun. But with summer being a busier recreation season it becomes a busier season for ambulance calls. High heat, being out on the water or camping, each have their own set of precautions to keep in mind. Dehydration limits the body's ability to cool itself and can lead to heat stroke. Staying hydrated and avoiding caffeine or alcohol is recommended. But in cases of extreme heat and humidity, it may be best to stay inside. Out on the river be mindful of other boaters and be on the look-out for debris dislodged by higher water levels. And out on the campsite whether it's grilling your favorite brats or roasting marshmallows, always take fire safety precautions. Taking a moment to make sure you're prepared ensures a fun and safe summer for everyone. According to the Mayo Clinic cases of skin cancer are on the rise. Prolonged exposure to UV rays can lead to melanoma, so experts recommend using sunscreens with an SPF rating between 30 and 50.

News 19's Sam Shilts met with these two young fishermen before making the trip to Paris, Kentucky for the Bassmaster High School National Championships. These youngsters are in elite company. Since early ages, Brady McCoy and Jace Smith have had a passion for angling and over the past 4 years, the two have solidified their place as some of the best fishermen in the state for their age. And now have their sights set on their second national competition. Brady McCoy and Jace Smith have earned an honor that only 2 percent of young anglers in the country ever get to experience, vying for a national title in the High School Bassmasters Championship. Over the past 4 years, these two consistently ranked as one of the top teams in the state. making the trip to nationals just 2 years before. And that success has only driven their passions more. McCoy first developed an interest in fishing when an injury to his wrist limited what he could do out on the water. That grew to getting involved in the River Road Junior Bassmasters Competition. Teammate Jace Smith also began at an early age, fishing for bluegills off of a dock. But the competitive nature of bass fishing captured his attention and the feelings of heading back to nationals are just beginning to sink in. Even though it's a title they're looking for they say they'll be happy with the experience either way. McCoy and Smith both honed their skills right here in the Coulee Region. In addition to the techniques with rod and reel and choices of lure, much of competition involves knowing each species of bass and being able to accurately estimate their patterns to find and catch the biggest fish. Beginning this weekend, they will be preparing for their competition. Officially beginning on June 22nd in Paris Tennessee over 6,900 young anglers in the country participate in competitive bass fishing. Only 200 make it to nationals each year. Winners are decided based on combined weight of daily catches.

Students from six La Crosse area schools competed in a dairy cook off Monday and although it was a competition it also aimed at getting kids familiar with skills that they need in adult life. As News 19's Sam Shilts tells you it made them more familiar with one of their home state's most important products. Six area schools competed to find out who has the best recipes including dairy; that competition in two parts. Each school brought their recipes for premade mac and cheese dishes and for the second competition a live timed competition for the best grilled cheese sandwich. Each team had thirty minutes and free reign on what they could use and how they made their sandwiches. Winners were decided by a panel of judges. But the competition is more of a spark. The real winners are the students developing cooking skills they will need in adulthood. Along the way they also found that simple sounding dishes can actually be much more and while they're at it, it doesn't hurt to learn about one of Wisconsin's biggest products. Though not everyone took home a prize, the skills and knowledge they do take home will last a lot longer.

A failed referendum last November forced the cuts and the district has spent the past six months coming up with a plan. The referendum would have brought in $500,000 a year for the next five years. Tough decisions by the school board, combined with generosity from the community, allowed the school district to lessen the impact of the cuts. News 19's Caroline Hecker tells you how the district got creative to deal with its financial realities. Superintendent Kevin Cardille says the district sees a shortfall of around $500,000 every year. To help reduce the impact the district used $200,000 from its fund balance, leaving $300,000 to be cut. Thanks to the community group 300 for 300, donations in excess of $100,000 were given to the district, leaving about $200,000 worth of expenses to be cut. Cardille says none of the cuts affect staffing and most of the cutbacks address efficiency issues. However despite no layoffs Cardille says it's what the district couldn't add to AP and stem courses' that is distressing. Some of the reductions include an increase the cost of a family activity pass purchased through the district and the rotation for new sports uniforms will be delayed by a year. The district recently mailed out a survey for residents and encourages people to respond online or mail it back to the school. The results will be presented at the next school board meeting and will help the district figure out what people may be willing to pay for the next time around. Cardille says he's encouraged by the district's enrollment numbers and is hopeful soon-to-be announced state aid for the district increases over this past school year.

At issue is the wording of a referendum approved by voters seven years ago. The Gale- Ettrick Trempealeau School Board says the referendum gives them the freedom to move forward with its plan to spend 5 million dollars to renovate the district's athletic facilities. That's despite a petition signed by more than a thousand district voters asking that the issue be put to a specific referendum. The State Department of Public Instruction ruled the petition invalid. News 19's Caroline Hecker has been covering this story and explains why the petition is invalid and what's next for the project. This has been a highly contested issue ever since the school board voted on April 6 to borrow up to 6 million dollars to make these improvements, the majority of people okay with the project but taking exception to the process. The school board's authority to borrow the money stems from a 2010 recurring referendum. Now a technicality will allow the district to move forward with its master plan. Engel says had the issue gone to referendum in a year's time. The overall cost of the project would have likely been $500,000 to a million dollars more due to increased building costs and higher interest rates. He also says contrary to what some people have said the district projects the mill rate to decrease next year, about $25 for a $100,000 house. Around 50 people showed up to last night's meeting, 25 voicing their opinions. The school board had a few options to consider in addition to sticking with its original resolution. It could have put the issue to referendum or held a special meeting in which everyone in attendance would have a vote.

Kids under 18 receive a free meal with a focus on nutrition. Northside Elementary qualifies as an "open site". That means any child can take advantage of the summertime meals including these members of the Boys and Girls Club. For north side, more than 50% of students are on free and reduced meal plans during the year, which many area families rely on. But those only account for parts of the whole year, helping hundreds of area kids enjoy a full stomach and a healthy, happy summer. Not all of the nine sites are open for the program yet. Some will only open once the summer school session begins.

Have you ever wondered what the La Crosse area was like thousands of years ago? The Archaeology Department at UW-La Crosse is digging deeper into its Annual Summer Field School, working on a site off County Road OT in Onalaska that was once inhabited by Native Americans. As News 19's Tianna Vanderhei tells you, the process requires a great deal of time and patience. A group of sixteen students have been busy, cautiously digging and brushing off artifacts. These items are the remains of a Native American village that dates back to around 1450 AD. Using small shovels, intricate surveying techniques and screens they're able to sift through the dirt, uncovering items like pottery, animal bones and parts of stone from arrowheads and knives, all of which help tell a greater story of the past. Those feature areas they are digging were large storage areas which essentially turned into garbage pits. Even as a freshman, archaeology major Anderson says students are out in the field working, stressing that it's that hands on experience that ensures they're prepared for their careers. The students are required as part of their undergraduate archaeology degree to do a field school with many of them choosing to stay in La Crosse because of its rich history.

Not that many years ago school lunches were a source of ridicule but times and menus have changed. School lunches are a source of pride in many districts. This week La Crosse hosts the Annual School Nutrition Conference. News 19's Sam Shilts shows you how school lunch programs continue working to improve the food schools serve our kids. Most of us can remember standing in line waiting for that hot meal to be served before heading back to our classrooms. But those meals are constantly changing, trying to become better, healthier and in Wisconsin this is where that happens. The School Nutrition Association of Wisconsin holds an annual conference with seminars aimed at improving quality of food programs and even classes in safety training like CPR. Not too long ago in US history, school lunch programs were a pretty new idea. Keynote speaker Marilyn Hurt gave some insight into where this all came from and where to go from here. Planning for the future isn't always an easy task. Dollar amounts are not always there to improve or make changes, but Marilyn says those hurdles are always there. For Wisconsin, it marks 60 years for the conference, coming together, bringing new ideas, and helping bring better food to our future generations. The Wisconsin School Nutrition Association began in 1955, although some of the first school meals began in Milwaukee around the early 1900's. Wisconsin, keeping with its dairy tradition, became one of the first states to implement a school milk program in 1954.

For high school graduates who plan to continue their education the choice of which college to attend is arguably the most important decision of their young lives. One way universities try to appeal to potential students is by providing guided tours. News 19's Sam Shilts tells you about the Vanguard Program at the UWL which has helped prospective students feel at home for over 40 years. When UW-L's Vanguard program started in 1976 it was little more than jumping on a PA system and asking what students would be interested in giving a tour. Now, 41 years later, 35 students each year donate their time helping new students and parents understand just what their university has to offer. High school is over and it's a time where these students will soon decide where and how they want to spend their next step in education. During campus visits to UW-La Crosse tours of are given by a group of students called Vanguards. Walking backwards most of the time, Vanguards are responsible for showing students and parents around campus, answering any questions they might have. Senior Claire Howard is in her first year as a Vanguard, one of 35 volunteering their time to make prospective new students feel at home. Sometimes that means drawing upon your own personal experience to share. The personal touch in the Vanguard program seems to be having an effect a good recruiting tool, yes, but more importantly for the Vanguards the level of dedication for these vanguards is pretty high. In addition to volunteering the extra time and accurately memorizing information about campus they also go through a rigorous application process. Of the 35 members each year only about half of those spots are open. Only after making it through several peer interviews do they get to join the organization. Daily campus tours are available at 11am and 2:15pm.

Among the higher profile issues on the ballot in our area is a school referendum in Holmen. The district hopes voters approve three questions with a total price tag of 4 million dollars. A yes vote would give the district the green light to get started on a series of projects that are part of a five phase development plan. News 19's Caroline Hecker is live at Village Hall in Holmen and tells you what you need to know about the referendum. It's been a pretty consistent flow of people here. Turnout is really only expected between 13 and 18 percent, one of the reasons for that is voter fatigue, people are still warn out from November. Another is the lack of big contested races. Here in Holmen though, the referendum is broken up into three questions. The first asks voters for around 3 million dollars to fund enhancements to building security. Question 2 would allow the district to build a new parking lot and an access road on the high school property. The third and final question would ask voters for $300,000 to create additional seating at Empire Stadium and purchase synthetic turf. The district says the turf alone would cost 1.3 million but its confident private donors will step up to help the district's goal is to have turf installed before this coming season. The district says if the referendum passes school property taxes will not increase.

before going to meet with Italy's Prime Minister and President.

A Wisconsin law that pays laborers more than the market rate for state construction projects could soon be repealed if some state republicans get their way. Republicans eliminated prevailing wage provisions for all local government construction projects in the last state budget. Now they're looking to get rid of it all together. Under the law, the state is required to pay workers a salary based on the top half of employer wages, fringe benefits and union contracts. But many republicans believe it ends up costing the state more money and eliminating it could save the state millions in projects. Supporters though say the elimination of prevailing wage could mean a less skilled and therefore slower workforce. The proposed bill to eliminate prevailing wage is currently in committee. If it passes through the house and senate it will go the Governor's desk to be signed into law.

Twenty five tornadoes were reported overnight from Texas to Wisconsin. Two people died, one in Chetek Wisconsin. At least 100-homes were destroyed. Emergency crews are sifting through the damage looking for survivors. Neighborhoods are now littered with piles of debris in this mobile home park in Chetek. Officials say the storm system hit when many people were home. So far one man was found dead at the mobile home, with more than two dozen hurt. We will have an update from Chetek as well as Governor Walker's response coming up at 6. In Rusk County the National Weather Service confirmed a tornado touchdown in the Bruce area. Emergency officials say 7 homes were destroyed as a result but no reports of injury.

Emergency response personnel put their skills to the test this afternoon, practicing what to do in an active shooter training scenario. News 19's Sam Shilts just returned from the La Crosse Regional Airport where that drill played out and joins us now with details on that scenario. It's a scenario we hope never to see, but still something emergency response needs to be prepared for. Swat team entered the airport, later followed by the fire department, with reports of shots fired. High school and college members of the Health Science Center played the part of those wounded in the mock shooting. Police used an armored vehicle to begin making contact with the shooter trying to get to an airplane represented by this MTU bus before deploying a flash bang and detaining the shooter. Similar crisis drills have taken place before at local high schools and rural farmlands, but this is the first time they've been able to use the airport which provides its own set of unique challenges in navigating the area, communicating with TSA and making sure the area is safe before fire department can arrive and create a triage area. Police and fire say drills like this help responders prepare not only for the scenario itself but the hopefully the stress that comes with it.

Slug: ATTACK

The incident happened late in the evening hours Monday, when a suspected terrorist attack followed a Ariana Grande concert in Manchester, England. Reporter Erielle Reshef reveals new details, that ISIS is claiming responsibility for the bombing. There was a vigil outside the Manchester Cathedral today for the victims of last night's terrorist bombing. In London the royal family paused to remember those who died in the attack. Laura and Isabella Imza were enjoying Ariana Grande's concert last night at the packed Manchester arena. The show was just wrapping up when they heard an explosion. A crowd of panicked teens and their parents climbed over seats and railings trying to get to safety. Officials say 22 people died in the attack among them 8 year old Saffie Rose Roussos and 18 year old student Georgina Callander. This is Georgina with Ariana Grande in 2015. Police say a 23-year-old man has been arrested in connection with the attack. Authorities carried out two search warrants in the city's suburbs. They believe the blast was caused by a suicide bomber who died during the blast. Manchester born Salman Abedi has not been formally identified by the coroner. Investigators are trying to determine whether the attacker acted alone or was involved in a network. For the first time in a decade the United Kingdom has raised its threat level to critical, believing another attack is imminent.

We begin near De Soto Wisconsin where one person is dead following a road washout between De Soto and Lansing early this morning. News 19's Caroline Hecker was on scene and has the latest details. Authorities recovered the body of the victim inside the vehicle around 8:30 a.m. along Highway 82 on the Wisconsin side. The car was found upside down in the river after the roadway collapsed and, according to a witness, swallowed the car. Right now the highway is closed in both directions with the hole estimated between 8 to 10 feet deep. The washout is located in the eastbound lane after you pass over Hendersen Bridge, not on the bridge itself. Crawford County Sheriff Dale McCulloch says the 911 call came from a driver following behind the eventual victim around 4:20 this morning. No word on that person's identity. That road serves as a major thoroughfare between Lansing and De Soto. Originally this morning crews thought that stretch of Highway 82 would be closed for weeks if not months but as of 10:30 this morning they tell me they're working to fill the hole in hopes of having the road open by this weekend. Until then drivers will have to drive to La Crosse or Prairie du Chien to cross over into Iowa.

The training exercise took months to plan down to the tiniest detail, to give emergency crews the most life like experience of an active shooter scenario. News 19's Sam Shilts was at Westby High School this morning for that drill and joins us now with details. It's a situation no one wants to see happen, but neglecting to have a plan could potentially turn a tragedy into a disaster. This morning Westby High School was the site of an exercise in dealing with an active shooter. Responders from all over Vernon County participated as well as all Westby staff and about 35 students. Sheriff Spears said drills like this are just as important if not more important for the schools as well as emergency response. Westby also uses something called sky alert, a mass notification system that the school can use for staff, students and families. During an incident, the school can use it to send texts, emails, and phone calls to staff and families as soon as it occurs. That system was used as part of the drill this morning. Following the drill members of emergency response helped evaluate during a debriefing session to make improvements and be even safer in the future. Some of the improvements discussed in that debriefing; having building maps more readily available, making medical supplies available in each classroom and trusting training without second guessing.

Slug: NARCAN FAILING

It was this time last year Gundersen Health System first made Narcan available over the counter with no prescription needed. Local fire departments and first responders have Narcan on hand but Gundersen says even though its readily available a number of factors are preventing users themselves from buying it. News 19's Caroline Hecker explains why health professionals say the low sales come as no surprise. The original intent of making Narcan available over the counter was to give people an avenue to saving lives. One nasal spray injector runs $80 but can mean the difference between life and death for a friend or family member. There's only one problem; they're not buying it. It's a problem described by local first responders as one that's getting worse by the day. The opioid epidemic in La Crosse doesn't discriminate, leaving a trail of destruction in the lives those old and young, rich and poor. That high can be immediately reversed using the drug Narcan and while it's available over the counter no questions asked at Gundersen Health System pharmacies few are buying. But that's fairly uncommon as Ertz says one dose of Narcan is only sold every few months. He's surprised but believes stigma and embarrassment are part of the reason why. But it's a stigma some doctors say shouldn't stop you from saving the life of a loved one. For Tri State Ambulance the story is dramatically different. Narcan at the pharmacy will run you $80 but receiving it along with an ambulance ride is going to cost close to $1,000. But that difference matters little to someone suffering from addiction, and if you think you're not affected by the problem think again. It's a multifaceted problem with no easy solution, but increased awareness and education aims to curb its deadly impact. Narcan can be used on someone who may have accidentally taken too many prescription drugs or for family member that gets into someone else's pills. That's why Dr. Eberlein encourages people to have a dose on hand in an emergency kit at home just in case. Cheryl Hancock with Coulee Council on Addictions says evidence based data shows 30 day in-patient treatment isn't enough anymore for those suffering from illicit drug additions. Instead 60 to 90 days is often needed. She adds until we start with a new, effective approach this problem is not going away. Narcan is available at pharmacies at Gundersen Health System in Onalaska, Holmen and Prairie du Chien. It can also be found at Degen Berglund pharmacies.

Carbon monoxide is an odorless, silent and toxic gas that could kill a person in just minutes and it's being blamed for a recent boating death in Wisconsin. Three friends were boating on the Saint Croix River this weekend heading to meet friends at a beach in Hudson, Wisconsin but they never showed up. The 24 year old woman on board was killed and two men were hospitalized. Authorities say the deadly gas is to blame after the boat hit a buoy affecting the engine. The boat had a carbon monoxide detector onboard but this tragedy serves as a reminder to make sure they are functioning properly. The DNR says if boats have detectors that are at least five years old they should be replaced because sensors wear out.

The Searchers

It was a story that seemed to capture the world – U.S. Army veteran Allen Thomas reached out on social media for help finding his twins who disappeared from his life in Korea nearly half a century ago. His simple plea on Facebook: "My name is Allen Thomas and I am looking for my son and daughter... I have been searching for decades..." generated an immediate and overwhelming worldwide response. Yet after over one million shares, Thomas was no closer to solving the mystery of what happened to his son and daughter, born to his ex-wife. That is when "20/20" teamed up with investigative genealogist Pamela Slaton, to work with Thomas and his daughter Charlene on their emotional quest.

Friday, June 2, 2017 Divided

A night of underage drinking led to two lives forever changed and an Alabama town divided. Cameron Harrison was charged with first degree rape of Savannah, a 16-year-old classmate. Multiple witnesses claim Savannah was "very intoxicated" at the party and cell phone video shows four people carrying her upstairs. Other witnesses from the party tell a different story, saying that although Savannah had been drinking, she was coherent, laughing, walking and speaking. Savannah speaks exclusively to ABC News.

Buried Alive

It was the eve of Thanksgiving in Newburgh, N.Y., when two cousins, 11-year-old Papito Martinez and 9year-old Jay Jay Rivera, went outside to build an epic snow fort. While working in freezing temperatures, a snowplow driver unknowingly dumped piles of heavy snow directly on top of the fort, burying the boys alive. Martinez and Rivera had just enough air to breathe and just enough warmth to stay conscious and encourage one another not to give up. In total the boys were buried for eight hours. Freezing, blue and taken to the hospital, Martinez and Rivera had good reason to give thanks on Thanksgiving, the day of their rescue.
