Local business may soon get a big financial push to conserve more water. The city council took the first step to develop a rebate program to get businesses to change water fixtures. The city is considering cash incentives for businesses that purchase water saving toilets and faucets. Currently, the city offers homeowners rebates to change their water guzzling washers and toilets. That effort already led to big savings in homes.

Fresno Mayor Ashley Swearengen will mark her one hundredth day in office tomorrow by issuing a progress report to the city. Today, the mayor met with her community advisory panel at City Hall. Swearengen says creating the group was one of her top priorities after taking office. The mayor claims her administration has made many accomplishments in her first one hundred days. They include the creation of an independent police auditor to check the work of Fresno police officers. Swearengen says she always supported creating the position, and it wasn't a quick response to questionable incidents involving the police department.

Demonstrators today will begin the second phase of a demonstration demanding water. In Mendota yesterday, growers, farm workers, and many of their supporters began a four day, 50-mile march. The annual event calls attention to the area's critical water shortage and record-breaking unemployment. Demonstrators want lawmakers to immediately increase water allocations to the valley's west side. They also want a water plan put before voters as a bond measure in the next election, and they're asking for public funding to help those facing remarkable hardship. Today and tomorrow, the march will go up Interstate 5 to Highway 152. The four-day March ends with a huge rally on Friday at the San Luis Reservoir.

Proposition 8 opponents say they have to be prepared for another future election. But, more importantly, they need to focus on educating more valley residents about gay rights. It's been more than five months since California voters approved Proposition 8, a measure that defines marriage as a union between a man and a woman. But a lawsuit was filed to overturn that decision, and the California Supreme Court now has until June 3rd to make its ruling. Seventy people attended a forum held Thursday night at Fresno City College. There, they discussed what went wrong before the election, and where they can go from here. Geoff Kors of Equality California says valley voters weren't targeted as much as they should have been, which is why an Equality California field office will open up in Fresno within the next several weeks.

Governor Schwarzenegger says the state will go bankrupt if voters don't pass his budget reforms. The governor joined Los Angeles Mayor Antonio Villaraigosa yesterday in the southland. The two joined forces to promote Propositions 1A through 1F on the upcoming ballot. If passed, the propositions would provide billions to the state. Governor Schwarzenegger says all the propositions need to be approved, not just one or two of them. Californians will go to the polls on May 19th for a special election.

Absentee ballots for California's May 19th Special Election started going out today. Voters will decide on six budget-balancing measures, including a spending cap tied to higher taxes. There's also a ballot measure that would allow the state to borrow money against future lottery earnings. For more information on the ballot measures, you can head to our website at abc30.com. Click on "See it on TV" for a link to special election resources.

Political analysts say it's easier to rally people against a ballot initiative than for one. But supporters have about four weeks to keep a band-aid on the budget. The central valley may have reached a saturation point when it comes to taxes. A loud crowd denounced taxes at Fresno's tax day tea party. One month earlier, Clovis voters said 'no' to Measure A, which would have raised their sales tax by one cent to help fund firefighters and police. But now, state ballot initiatives are asking voters to give a little bit more to fix the state budget.

The city of Madera teamed up with the Madera Unified School District and Allied Waste for a shoe recycling program on Earth Day. Students, teachers, and other residents are being encouraged to drop off old athletic shoes at special bins on each of the district's campuses. The shoes will be collected tomorrow and then sent to a Nike facility where they'll be turned into material for sports surfaces like basketball courts and playgrounds. The high school that collects the oldest shoes will win 500 dollars for their athletic program, and the winning middle school will get 250 dollars.

The city currently allows residents to water every other day, based on whether their address ends with an odd or an even number. The city limits the hours residents can water, from 7 at night to 6 in the morning, and again from 8 to 11 in the morning. Under the new guidelines, the 8 to 11 watering would be eliminated. By eliminating the late morning cycle and encouraging conservation, the city hopes to cut water use by 20 percent.

California Democrats are meeting this weekend in Sacramento for their annual convention. One of the hot topics will be next year's governor's race. But the main focus is on the special election set for next month. Groups that are typically aligned with the Democratic Party, such as teachers' unions, are divided on the special election ballot measures. Especially Proposition 1A, which would extend for two years recently passed car, income, and sales taxes, while directing state lawmakers to reduce state spending.

The votes are still being counted in today's special election, but there's little suspense left at this hour. As our exclusive Action News Survey U.S.A. polls predicted, all but one of the statewide propositions have gone down to defeat. Proposition 1A would have increased the state's rainy day fund and maintained a series of tax hikes. Proposition 1B also went down to defeat.

ACTION NEWS AM LIVE, 5/20/09, LENGTH :21 SEC., LOCAL

California voters have rejected the slate of budget propositions presented by Governor Schwarzenegger and state lawmakers. The overwhelming defeat of the special election package means California will have to cut about 20 percent of its general fund spending to balance the budget through mid-2010. The only proposition passing is the law to limit pay raises to elected officeholders while the state is running a deficit.

California voters made their voices heard yesterday. While turnout was light for the state's special election, those who did vote were clear, rejecting five of the six budget-related propositions on the ballot Action News Capitol reporter Nannette Miranda was the only local reporter in Washington today, when Governor Schwarzenegger declared that deeper cuts are now on the way for schools, health care and public safety.

School district leaders say these are some of the worst cuts they have ever seen. Many were not surprised with special election results and say they are prepared to make the deep cuts necessary. With California voters rejecting the state ballot measures Tuesday, local educators are now bracing for big cuts to their budgets. Fresno County schools superintendent Larry Powell says Fresno County's 34 school districts will need to cut an additional 250 to 750 dollars per child. Fresno unified Chief Financial Officer Ruthie Quinto says this will be the third round of cuts this year adding up to nearly 100 million dollars.

Governor Schwarzenegger says he hears voters loud and clear now it's time to balance the state budget the old-fashioned way. That's after voters rejected several special election budget proposals last night. Voters said "no" to five of the six budget-related propositions on the ballot. Even the threat of a second round of cuts to education and public safety couldn't convince voters to support the ballot measures. Now the governor facing a new 21 billion dollar deficit says it's time to follow the people's will.

ACTION NEWS 6:30PM, 5/20/09, LENGTH :54 SEC., LOCAL

On Tuesday, California voters rejected five of the six budget-related propositions on the special elections ballot. Now deeper cuts are now on the way for health care, public safety and schools. This will mean the third round of cuts for Fresno County schools this year. Many expect to reduce their budget by 250 to 750 dollars per student. Superintendent Larry Powell says many schools could break even after receiving federal stimulus money, but he expects programs like sports, art, drama, and music to suffer. Now he is calling on professionals in the community to keep after-school programs going.

Some eighteen-hundred students in the south valley will be forced to delay their degrees another semester. The College of the Sequoias has just announced it's cancelling some summer classes. Defeat of the special election propositions forced the shutdown of the fourth summer session at C.O.S. Admissions had to slash thirty classes and started turning away students. Many students are worried the classes they plan to take in the fall won't be offered at all leaving them to fall behind on finishing their degrees.

Fresno's mayor and police chief both went before the city council today to discuss how to make some difficult spending cuts work without depleting their departments. Fire Chief Randy Bruegman said if his department's budget is approved as proposed, he will have to take two engine companies out of regular service. Bruegman is being asked to trim about four and a half million dollars from his budget. The police department is being asked to cut twelve million in spending. Just yesterday, the union that represents Fresno's police officers announced a tentative deal with the city that would cancel a scheduled two percent pay raise. If union members agree to go without the raise, the department will save enough money to keep ten high ranking officers from being demoted.

Gottschalk's liquidation sales are expected to end by mid-July. Fresno's Public House restaurant remains open tonight despite being foreclosed and sold at auction. Some employees walked off the job at the restaurant in Granite Park after this morning's auction. The property was auctioned because the owners of the public house defaulted on a two million dollar loan. No one placed a bid, so the property now belongs to a local couple who loaned the money. Visalia firefighters are fighting possible furloughs. The city asked all of its employees to give up a 4-percent raise expected at the end of the month to help ease the city's mounting budget deficit. Most employees refused so now the city must consider furloughs and layoffs. Firefighters are expecting furloughs even if they give up their raise. The city council will talk about the budget on Monday.

South valley city officials say plans to move a casino have stalled. The city of Porterville had signed a memorandum of understanding with the Tule River Indian tribe last year to move Eagle Mountain Casino to the valley floor. But now the city says new tribe council members differ with the city on plans for the project. The plans call for the casino to move near the Porterville airport. Officials also wanted to build a hotel and golf course. The city said moving the casino closer to downtown would be safer and more convenient for visitors. The Tule River Economic Development Corporation could not be reached for comment.

Visalia firefighters are battling a different type of emergency lately over finances instead of flames. Dozens of supporters of the Visalia Fire Department brought signs and wore red shirts yesterday. It's in protest of the city's latest proposal to cut six million dollars from next year's budget. The city has asked all employees to give up a four percent raise expected to go into effect at the end of the month. City officials say giving up the raise would prevent furloughs - but firefighters say they were told otherwise. Firefighters expect furloughs to increase response times. The city council will take up the issue at Monday's meeting.

Visalia firefighters are in the middle of a meeting that could save some of their jobs. The council could decide tonight to close fire stations and furlough some firefighters. Last week, dozens of supporters came out to protest the plan to cut back firefighters to help close a budget hole. The city has asked all employees to give up a four percent raise expected to go into effect at the end of the month. Council members have said that would prevent the furloughs.

Mayor Swearengin's message for the Governor tomorrow will be "borrow but don't take." That way the city can arrange short-term financing to deliver services. The Fresno city council also voted to join the league of California cities in a lawsuit against the state over the budget cuts. But a lawsuit can't be filed until the state budget is finalized.

ACTION NEWS AM LIVE, 6/17/09, LENGTH :25 SEC., LOCAL

Governor Schwarzenegger will be in Fresno tomorrow to speak about the state's budget crisis. The governor will meet with the Central California Hispanic Chamber of Commerce at the Tower Theater in Fresno. The Governor is expected to discuss his plans to borrow money from the cities, to balance the budget. That money is meant to go toward city maintenance. The city council and Mayor Ashley Swearengin are expected to voice their concerns tomorrow, to the governor.

The Clovis City Council also approved major cuts to its public transit system tonight. The weekend stage line bus service will be suspended to offset funding losses through "Measure C" and the gas tax. The city council also voted to eliminate the taxi voucher service, which provides transportation for passengers in wheelchairs. A fare increase of 25 cents will also go into effect in August. The general services manager says the Fresno FAX route on Shaw Avenue will continue on the weekends.

ACTION NEWS AM LIVE 6/23/09, LENGTH :38 SEC., LOCAL

Clovis council members say the budget decisions they made last night were painful and difficult. The biggest blow is to police and firefighters and ultimately the Clovis community. City council members unanimously approved the budget late last night. They had to slash $5.3 million dollars from its general fund budget which includes public safety. The fire department will lose 3 firefighters and 1 staff member and will have to close the downtown fire station which just opened last year. Nineteen police officer positions were also cut. Clovis is able to avoid many more layoffs because of retirement incentives and vacancies. The city is also reducing hours at its senior center, and closing the Clovis recreation center.

ACTION NEWS AM LIVE 6/23/09, LENGTH :43 SEC. LOCAL

Even abandoned dogs and cats in Fresno are now feeling the pinch of the troubled economy. Fresno city leaders have slashed 130 thousand dollars to the SPCA's annual budget. This, as the number of animals left at the S.P.C.A. has already increased because of the recession. The budget cut will reduce staff at the west central Fresno location and slow down emergency response times. The city council says everyone must take a percentage cut to balance next year's budget.

ABC30 Plus D2 (Sub Channel) 5/31/09, 12PM, 1 HOUR SYNDICATION

The California Economy in Financial Crisis will be the focus of this forum produced by KABC-TV, Los Angeles. It was produced two days after the special election and featured a distinguished panel including State Controller John Chiang, State Inspector General Laura Chick, Economist Charlotte Chamberlain, Economist and Nobel Laureate Woody Clark, and Economist Larry Harris.

Dozens of people were enjoying Easter Sunday at the park -- when police say two groups of people decided to settle an argument with a shootout -- right in the middle of the park. This west central Fresno Park turned into a crime scene Easter Sunday. Lucy Rubalcaba had just finished an egg hunt with her family, when suddenly shots rang out. Fresno police say Sunday's shooting started after two groups at the park got into an argument. Multiple shots were fired, hitting an innocent bystander in the torso. The teenage victim was taken to the hospital with minor injuries, and the suspects ran off. So did several families, who were frightened by what they saw.

Three top officials of a former north valley farm labor contractor are facing criminal charges in connection with the death of a pregnant teen. Aria Jimenez died in May of 2007 from heat stroke while she was working a San Joaquin county vineyard. Authorities say she died because she lacked proper access to shade and water. Jimenez's death triggered protests by farm workers demanding better working conditions. The San Joaquin County District Attorney today charged the owner and two managers of Merced farm labor with involuntary manslaughter. The state revoked Merced farm labor's license last year.

Clovis police have arrested the man they believe robbed an Arco gas station over the weekend. Police believe the suspect is also responsible for yesterday's bank robbery in northwest Fresno. This morning, Fresno police arrested Keith Bowen for that crime. After noticing he looked like the suspect in the Clovis robbery on Saturday, he was turned in to Clovis police. Two people, including the victim at the gas station, identified Bowen as being the robber. On Saturday, he told the clerk he had a gun in his pocket and demanded money. Bowen has been booked into the Fresno county jail for both crimes.

The Tulare County District Attorney's office has decided not to file charges against the Woodlake police department. An Exeter man was shot in the back near a police shooting range earlier this year. Eland Perryman and his wife were walking in an orchard near their house in January when Leland was struck in the back. The DA's report states the bullet that struck Perryman's was the same kind of gun used by Woodlake police officers at the shooting range that morning. The report also found officers were shooting at a target placed on an embankment wing which is against the rules. The DA's office concluded no crime was committed. The Woodlake police chief was advised not to talk to Action News by the city attorney. The Perrymans plan to file a lawsuit.

The central valley may have reached a saturation point when it comes to taxes. A loud crowd denounced taxes at Fresno's tax day tea party. One month earlier, Clovis voters said 'no' to Measure A, which would've raised their sales tax by one cent to help fund firefighters and police. But now, state ballot initiatives are asking voters to give a little bit more to fix the state budget. The six propositions on the ballot would cost the average family about 12-hundred dollars a year for the next few years. If the initiatives don't pass, the state will be staring at a 6 billion dollar budget deficit, immediately. Political analysts say that'll force legislators to make painful cuts. Social services like health care and unemployment benefits are likely to get hit first. So are state colleges, like Fresno State. Supporters in big business and the biggest teachers' union have raised more than 27 million dollars to back them. Governor Schwarzenegger is trying to close a 24 billion dollar shortfall in the state budget. With taxes off the table, state lawmakers are being forced to slash money from programs. People on Medi-Cal and in the state's healthy families program stand to lose the most. Nearly 2-million Californians would lose their health care benefits or insurance. That includes 942 thousand children who would lose their health insurance through healthy families. 23 thousand of those children live in Fresno County.

The doors to adult health day care centers would completely shut under the latest round of cuts. Nearly 40,000 disabled Californians depend on them for meals, some medical care and social interaction. The state's finances have been in a freefall for months, forcing leaders to beg, raise taxes, borrow and cut. Last September, the projected deficit grew to $17 billion for the current fiscal year. Five months later, it was on track to balloon to $42 billion by next summer. And solving that wasn't enough; another shortfall of $24 billion dollars will likely appear over the next year. Health care for nearly one million low-income children would also end. Education would lose another $680 million. And state workers' pay would be reduced 5%. That's on top of the two furlough days, which were already a 10% cut. This latest round of proposed cuts is in addition to the package $21 billion of deficit-reducing solutions the governor released last week, which included closing most state parks. Randall José may be hit with a double whammy: he'll likely lose his in-home support service because the state is cutting off those with less severe disabilities and his adult health day care may shut down.

President Obama hopes a grassroots effort will push Congress to act on health care reform. In Fresno, a rally is scheduled for ten this morning in front of Senator Dianne Feinstein's office at the federal courthouse. Afterwards, a special delegation will present a multi-signature petition to Feinstein's staff, asking the senator to show her support for President Obama's health reform, including the public health insurance option. There will be similar rallies later today at the senator's other California offices.

Dozens of local seniors and health care workers are urging U.S. Senator Dianne Feinstein to support President Obama's health care reform plan. The group is hoping that Feinstein will consider supporting a public health insurance option. They believe it will help make costs less expensive. Today's downtown Fresno rally was one of four being held around the state. Protesters say the current health system is falling apart.

We should know in about two weeks how much federal money California will get to boost education programs. Governor Schwarzenegger formally applied for more than three billion dollars of federal stimulus money to replace education funds that were cut because of budget shortages. About two and a half billion of that money would go to elementary, middle and high schools. The rest is intended for universities, like Fresno State and U.C. Merced.

The third bomb scare this year at Fresno High School has campus administrators taking steps to end the pranks. Someone left a lunch bag in Royce Hall this morning -- with a note saying "this is a bomb." That prompted the school principal to call in the bomb squad -- and evacuate some 25-hundred students as a precaution. School administrators have had enough ... and so have students. Planting a fake bomb is a felony offense. The district is now offering a one thousand dollar reward to help catch those responsible. The school's principal also wants the person or people involved expelled.

This boot camp opened 11 years ago as an experiment and has reformed hundreds of teens through the years. But today, the program will officially come to an end because Fresno county supervisors say they just don't have the money to keep it going. Fresno County's probation department says running the boot camp costs about seven million dollars a year. Money the county won't have next year because of severe state budget cuts. So to solve an 8 and a half million dollar deficit, chief probation officer Linda Penner says she no choice but to close the facility. More than a dozen employees from the probation department have been laid off; others are being transferred within the department. In just over 12 hours, polls open for a special election. Turnout is expected to be low, and it appears most who do vote are skeptical of the plan aimed at closing the budget gap. Our exclusive Action News poll conducted by Survey USA shows 57 percent said they are certain to vote no on Proposition 1A, the rainy day budget stabilization fund. Only 32 percent said they'll vote yes for Proposition 1B, the education funding payment plan. The no votes dominate 54 percent to 37 percent. Propositions 1C, 1D and 1E also appear to be headed for defeat. The only proposition that may pass is 1F. That would cap the salaries of elected officials. Right now, 48 percent said they are certain to vote yes, and 38 percent said no.

School district leaders say these are some of the worst cuts they have ever seen. Many were not surprised with special election results and say they are prepared to make the deep cuts necessary. With California voters rejecting the state ballot measures Tuesday, local educators are now bracing for big cuts to their budgets. Fresno County schools Superintendent Larry Powell says Fresno County's 34 school districts will need to cut an additional 250 to 750 dollars per child.

On Tuesday, California voters rejected five of the six budget-related propositions on the special elections ballot. Now deeper cuts are now on the way for health care, public safety and schools. This will mean the third round of cuts for Fresno County schools this year. Many expect to reduce their budget by 250 to 750 dollars per student. Superintendent Larry Powell says many schools could break even after receiving federal stimulus money, but he expects programs like sports, art, drama, and music to suffer. Now he is calling on professionals in the community to keep after school programs going.

Based on a new report, most of the schools here in the central valley are in the bottom half compared to the rest of the state. This afternoon Action News sat down with Fresno Unified Superintendent Michael Hanson to find out what he thinks is succeeding, and what needs to improve. Superintendent Michael Hanson says Fresno Unified is working to improve even the most recent scores. According to the 2007-2008 academic performance index or API report, a number of schools have made dramatic improvement, especially in math.

Saturday, May 16th, 4:30PM, :30 Minutes, Local

How are students affected by economic hard times? We explore how financial worries are impacting kids and families and also look at solutions, plus some of the positive side effects of the recession. Talk to students about economic worries. Are they worried about their future? Do they hear their parents arguing now more than ever over money? Is there a lack of hope that exists? Lots of high school students may be worried they won't be able to go away for college. Community college enrollment is on the rise. How are students both younger and older adjusting? Speak to a counselor. Family service workers in Tulare County are assisting neediest families, are they seeing a rise for more services because of the recession? Mention transiency, kids can be lost to transiency, leading temporary lives.

Segment #1 : City of Fresno: Homeless Prevention and Policy Management. We were joined by Greg Barfield, Policy Manager, here to talk about Fresno's Homeless Prevention and Policy. This ten year plan is to end chronic homelessness in our city. HUD has awarded a direct formula allocation of $3,130,746 of Homeless Prevention and Rapid Re-Housing (HPRP) funds to the City of Fresno based on its annual receipt of Federal McKinney-Vento funds through the Emergency Shelter Grant (ESG) Program. Funds are intended to prevent homelessness, assist persons that are homeless, assist persons threatened with homelessness and rapidly re-house persons who are homeless, through diversion away from the emergency shelter system.

Segment #2: Homeless Village: Some of Fresno's homeless are just days away from receiving money from the $2.4 million settlement from the City of Fresno. The money they receive will be in the form of housing vouchers. Action News Anchor Liz Harrison reports that it will solve the housing issue for some but hundreds more are filling up empty lots with not just tents but shanty towns. An advocate for Fresno's homeless says the city should provide safe housing for those who need it or at least designate a safe space for those who want to camp. Assistant City Manager Bruce Ruud says the Mayor's office should have an announcement about the short term solution within the next two months.

Segment #3: Children First: Hope in Hard Times: ABC30 and their Children First partners, Children's Hospital Central California, The Fresno County Office of Education and the Educational Employees Credit Union, presented a special program called "Children First: Hope in Hard Times." We took a look at a couple of teenagers whose lives have changed because of the economy. Stories are typical of what's happening in many other agricultural-based communities who are experiencing a double blow with jobs drying up because of the recession and a drought. The rest of the world might be facing a recession, but in Firebaugh it almost feels like a depression because 40 percent are unemployed. More than 500 Firebaugh families showed up at a recent food giveaway with some standing in line for more than 7 hours. Water equals economic development and where water flows food grows and right now they are having a difficult time.

Saturday, May 16th, 4:30PM, :30 Minutes, Local

How are students affected by economic hard times? We explore how financial worries are impacting kids and families and also look at solutions, plus some of the positive side effects of the recession, and talk to students about economic worries. Are they worried about their future? Do they hear their parents arguing now more than ever over money? Is there a lack of hope that exists? Lots of high school students may be worried they won't be able to go away for college. Community college enrollment is on the rise. How are students both younger and older adjusting? Speak to a counselor. Family service workers in Tulare County are assisting neediest families, are they seeing a rise for more services because of the recession? Mention transiency, kids can be lost to transiency, leading temporary lives.

Segment #3: Children First: Hope in Hard Times: ABC 30's Children First and their partners, Children's Hospital Central California, The Fresno County Office of Education, and the Educational Employees Credit Union presented a special program called "Children First: Hope in Hard Times." We took a look at a couple of teenagers whose lives have changed because of the economy. Stories are typical of what's happening in many other agricultural based communities who are experiencing a double blow with jobs drying up because of the recession and a drought. The rest of the world might be facing a recession but in Firebaugh it almost feels like a depression because 40 percent are unemployed. More than 500 Firebaugh families showed up at a recent food giveaway with some standing in line for more than 7 hours. Water equals economic development and where water flows food grows and right now they are having a difficult time.

About one thousand people showed up to Firebaugh's community center patiently waiting for this week's meal that will feed their families. One mother we spoke to says unless the state deals with the water shortage she'll have to continue relying on food drives like the one today. Marchers are asked to wear blue t-shirts tomorrow to represent water. About three thousand people have announced they will participate. Governor Schwarzenegger has announced he will attend the rally at San Luis reservoir on Friday.

ACTION NEWS 6:30PM, 4/13/09, LENGTH 1:03 MIN., LOCAL

About one thousand unemployed residents lined up for free food today in the ag community of Firebaugh. The food giveaway is a prelude to this week's march for water -- to highlighting the drought that has affected the west side of the county. The water march begins tomorrow morning in Mendota and ends at the San Luis reservoir.

ACTION NEWS 11PM, 4/13/09, LENGTH 2:23 MIN. LOCAL

There's no question the shortage of water means fewer crops and fewer jobs. It's created hardships for those who depend on farming, from the growers, to the workers. Tomorrow's march is supposed to be a show of unity between the two groups. But not everyone is on board. Of course, getting by will be a lot tougher for many. The march is seen as a way to highlight the problems caused by the lack of available water on the west side of the valley. But some critics say the real culprits are simply the fact that the west side is a natural desert, and there is a drought. The march for water will not change that.

ACTION NEWS AM LIVE, 4/14/09, LENGTH :29 SEC., LOCAL

Hundreds are expected to take part in the "march for water" in Mendota this morning. The event is being held to highlight the economic problems caused by the drought and limits in state and federal water supplies. The four-day march is supposed to be a show of unity between farmers and workers -- but one notable farm labor group, the UFW, will not be marching. The UFW and some environmental groups believe growers are using farm workers in order to further their demands for a relaxation of environmental regulations.

ACTION NEWS AM LIVE, 4/14/09, LENGTH 1:45 MIN., LOCAL

Members of the CA Latino Water Coalition and its chairman, comedian Paul Rodriguez, are demanding more water resources for the west side of the valley. They say the drought and lack of water out here have created a crisis and unemployment and hunger. Mendota and Firebaugh are seeing unemployment rates of 40 percent and those who depend on crops to make a living are going hungry. Yesterday Firebaugh's food drive brought out 1,000 people looking for food. What they say they really need is a long-term solution like water storage.

ACTION NEWS 5PM, 4/14/09, LENGTH 2:03 MIN., LOCAL

It was comedian Paul Rodriguez who got the crowd fired up this morning in Mendota, as chair of the California Latino water coalition. Rodriguez says he is angry that legislators have ignored the central valley's desperate water needs for so long. Growers and several thousand farm workers hit the road, marching along the fields where they would normally be working. Due to drought conditions and zero percent water allocations, the unemployment rate in most of the area hovers between 25 and 40 percent.

ACTION NEWS 6PM, 4/14/09, LENGTH 1:27 MIN., LOCAL

Three Fresno county supervisors stood side by side supporting valley farming interests on Tuesday. The hope is the march will draw state and national attention to the plight of west side farm workers and farmers. Henry Perea, Fresno County Supervisor: "And the very people that are harvesting the crops are starving. I mean that's a national shame." For months, images of unemployed Westside farm workers and their families in line for a box of food have flooded the media, heartbreakening images that supervisor Phil Larsen has seen in person.

Hundreds of growers and farm workers marched next to Interstate 5 in Fresno County today to demand more water. The protestors covered about eight miles on day two of a four-day march for water. They're calling for an immediate temporary reprieve from environmental restrictions that prevent pumping from the Delta. They say those restrictions -- combined with three years of drought -- have cost farm workers thousands of jobs and forced growers to leave fields fallow. One protestor who owns an ag and industrial repair business says the water crisis affects everyone.

State water officials plan to spend up to four million dollars over the next year to help educate Californians about water conservation. In February, Governor Schwarzenegger declared California to be in a state-wide drought, after three straight years of below-average rainfall. The Department of Water Resources is releasing 30 percent of water allocations requested this year by private water agencies in central and southern California. Experts say everyone in the state needs to do their part to help conserve. A new education program will include public service announcements and posters.

ACTION NEWS 6PM, 4/21/09, LENGTH: 40 SEC., LOCAL

Some valley growers will be getting a little bit of federal water after all. The Federal Bureau of Reclamation is giving growers south of the Delta ten percent of their annual allotment. That's up from the zero percent they were anticipating. It's welcome news to growers on the parched west side of the San Joaquin valley.

ACTION NEWS 11PM, 4/21/09, LENGTH 1:55 MIN., LOCAL

It's not going to be enough water to put idled land back into production, or to hire back laid off farm workers, but it may be enough to help some growers survive this, the third dry year in a row. It's a small measure of relief for growers on the west side of the Central Valley. The Bureau of Reclamation says there's now enough water to give those growers a small break. The Westlands district covers about half a million acres of land. More than half of that – land that grows everything from cotton and tomatoes to lettuce and almonds – has been idle because of a lack of water this year. The water they do get comes from reservoirs in the northern part of the state and while they've had a surge of snow melt, competing demands, like wildlife refuges, take precedent over Westlands' needs.

ACTION NEWS AM LIVE, 4/22/09, LENGTH :24 SEC., LOCAL

Growers say the ten percent from the central valley project will help reduce their need for well water, but will not be enough to plant additional crops. About 200 thousand acres of age land on the west side has been left untouched because of the drought. Nearly 40 thousand farm workers have lost their jobs.

The current watering restrictions on odd and even days will continue, but residents are being asked to change the time of day they water. The city currently allows residents to water every other day, based on whether their address ends with an odd or an even number. The city limits the hours residents can water, from 7 at night to 6 in the morning, and again from 8 to 11 in the morning. Under the new guidelines, the 8 to 11 watering would be eliminated. By eliminating the late morning cycle and encouraging conservation, the city hopes to cut water use by 20 percent.

Farmers and local leaders are preparing for a visit from President Obama's interior secretary. Ken Salazar will be in Fresno this Sunday. Salazar will hold a town hall meeting to hear how ongoing water reductions are impacting the valley. Just last week, Governor Arnold Schwarzenegger asked President Obama to declare Fresno County a disaster area. The move could give the valley more federal money. Today Congressman Jim Costa told us he's not sure the president will grant the request. Congressman Costa hopes the secretary will encourage the president to take action.

The Fresno City Council unanimously passed a resolution requesting relief from the federal government's reduced water deliveries to the valley. Council member Larry Westerlund proposed today's resolution. Several speakers also outlined the impact of the valley's water crisis to farms, farm workers, and communities such as Mendota. Unemployment in Mendota now stands around 40 percent because of reduced water supplies to fields and farmlands.
