Guest Tracy Wimmer, Consumers Energy spokesperson

Consumers Energy has announced it is proposing a targeted undergrounding pilot program pending approval from the Michigan Public Service Commission. The program is meant to help the company better understand how to bury power lines in a cost-effective way to strengthen Michigan's electric grid and reduce outages. The pilot will study real-world resiliency improvements that result from burying power lines, and how those improvements compare with other approaches to improving electric service for nearly 2 million Michigan homes and businesses. Buried power lines are protected from common outage causes, including lightning, high winds, tornadoes, heavy snow, ice and falling tree limbs. Buried lines also reduce or eliminate downed wire electrocutions, fire hazards, vehicle collisions, and falling poles, improving public safety.

Guest: Nick Nerbonne

Media, Digital and Industry Relations Director, Travel Michigan
Michigan Economic Development Corporation

As fall descends upon the Great Lakes State, Pure Michigan is inviting visitors to spice up the season with a campaign offering visitors a fresh dash of fall. The state's natural beauty and fall delights are perfectly scribed in renowned Detroit poet Jessica Care Moore's new "Keep Falling for Michigan" poem. Ms. Moore was brought on as an additional voice to the iconic Pure Michigan brand earlier this year, and this new ode to Michigan embraces the change of seasons with powerful language and stunning visuals.

Each year, Michigan's 19 million acres of forests come alive with vibrant hues of orange, yellow and red creating the perfect backdrop to fully immerse in the fresh sensations of fall. From vibrant city centers and charming small towns to endless nature and out-of-this-world stargazing, there is something fresh for everyone to experience in Pure Michigan.
