Pam Creamer

Pam Creamer is a lifelong artist who has created work and painted murals all over the country. Pam was the primary breadwinner in their home for years, until her onset of Lyme Disease in 2009, which hindered her ability to paint and carry on with her life as it was before. She has been treated with oral antibiotics since 2009, under the care of one of the top Lyme Doctors in the country, Dr. Richard Horowitz in New York.

Dr. Kristen McElveen

Dr. Kristen McElveen is a naturopathic doctor who has been in private practice in Springvale since 2009. Her focus is in chronic illness, which often includes Lyme Disease and other tick-borne illness. She educates patients on clinical nutrition and lifestyle changes as much as possible before resorting to herbal, nutraceutical or pharmaceutical medicine. After earning her pre-med degree at Agnes Scott College in Decatur, GA, she received her naturopathic medical degree from National College of Natural Medicine (NCCNM), the first and oldest accredited naturopathic medical school in the US. After 2 years of residency at NCCNM, she moved back to the East coast and started her practice, Bare Medicine, in the heart of Southern Maine.

Camps #134

Guests: Rich Deering

Maine summer camps offer a unique opportunity for young people. For generations, children have come to our beautiful state to experience the wonder of the outdoors, and to gain life skills such as independence. They have also created lasting memories with their peers. Today we speak with our guests who were so inspired by their own years at camps that they decided to give back to the state by creating camp programs for children from Maine and around the globe.

Camps #134 - Dr. Lisa Belisle

Rich Deering

Rich Deering started at Birch Rock Camp at the age of nine. Six summers later, he became a staff member. He worked his way up from teaching swimming to waterfront director to head counselor. Then in 1995 Rich became the camp director. Today he works at Birch Rock Camp as the alumni and community director.

Mapping Maine's Future #138

Dating: May 4, 2014

How do we get from here to there? Maine magazine conducting Peter Vigue's interview addressed this question in the May issue of Maine magazine in his article "A Leader Like No Other," a thought-provoking article about Cianbro CEO Peter Vigue. Today we speak with Peter and Phil about the future of business in Maine, the possibility of an east-west highway, and how we may use our resources and ingenuity to improve the work and personal lives of individuals living within our state and elsewhere. We also discuss the importance of workplace wellness. We hope our conversation may inspire you to think differently about what it means to work and live in the Great State.

The Birth Team #139

Sunday, May 11, 2014

Birth is arguably the most important of all life events. The way it takes us into the world, and brings our children into the world, has a far-reaching impact. Today we speak with individuals who are thinking about birth in new and interesting ways. Listen in on our conversations with Portland OB/GYN Dr. Anne Kalkbrenner and doula Jodi Phinney and Leah Deragon of Birth Roots and hear about the evolution of this process and how young Maine families are brought to the world.

Pop for Change #145

Friday, June 20, 2014

What happens when you combine a great party with helping your neighbors? Pop the Cause and Pop for Change. In 2008, Bettina Doulton of Cellardoor Winery and Lani Stiles of Megunticook Market, began hosting an annual party, Pop the Cork, in Rockport to benefit midcoast organizations such as the Farnsworth Art Museum and the Penobscot Bay YMCA. Last year they decided to radically revamp Pop the Cork: they renamed it Pop the Cause and pledged to raise $160,000 for four local charities. Tickets for this June 26th event sold out in less than two hours. This prompted them to add a second event, Pop for Change, on June 28th. Tickets for this event were only available to those who had donated four hours of volunteer work. Today we speak with Bettina Doulton and Devon Salisbury of Cellardoor as well as representatives of the organizations who will benefit from this year's Pop the Cause and Pop for Change: Joe Curl of Coastal Opportunities, Rusty Brace of United Midcoast Opportunities, Lee Karker of Meals on Wheels, and Stephanie Primm and Pinny Beebe-Cemter of the Midcoast Hospitality House.
