How can you be sure the foods you are eating are real whole grain? The USDA says that we cannot judge whether a food is whole grain from its color. One hundred per cent wheat on the packaging does not mean a product is made with whole grain. When grains are refined, they have been milled and that process removed the bran as well as fiber, iron and many of the B Vitamins. White breads, white rice and white flour are all refined grains. Join in on the conversation on the USDA website.
