

A bill that would allow physicians to prescribe lethal doses of medications to terminally ill patients failed to pass through an Arkansas House committee today (TUES). The bill's sponsor Republican Representative Dan Douglas said the bill is for patients of sound mind who want to choose the circumstances of their death if they are given six months or less to live.

News08

:24

“individual's going through”

The bill received no motion to progress to the full House after several speakers against the bill came forward.