

QUARTERLY REPORT #2 for 2016

FOR PERIOD COVERING

April 1, 2016 to June 30, 2016

Our extended coverage of the Capobianco murder trial begins with witness after witness testifying that the defendant told differing stories about where he was and what he was doing when his pregnant ex-girlfriend went missing.

Also this quarter, we provide live and extended coverage of the Maui Film Festival including interviews with honored industry leaders.

This period also covers the transition of Maui's Hospitals to Kaiser managed facilities. Maui Hospital Negotiations Continue: The Appeals Court allows transition activities between the State and Kaiser to resume at Maui Memorial Medical Center, Kula Hospital, and the Lāna'i Community Hospital.

On the roadways, we explore the dropped speed limit on the Mokulele Highway, which some say is now a speed trap. The speed limit on the Mokulele Highway has been temporarily changed to 35 mph due to the active construction zone between the Humane Society and N Kihei Road. Also, Maui police issue more than 15-hundred citations during their May/June seatbelt enforcement campaign.

Maui comes into the national spotlight as notorious twins are found in a smashed SUV at the bottom of a 200 foot cliff in East Maui. The two had been fighting and murder charges were brought against the surviving twin. Both had moved to Haiku after a trail of bad press followed them when they shuttered yoga studios on the mainland. We follow the story with courtroom coverage and provide content to national media outlets.

We also broadcast a story on the chances of a "mega-tsunami" impacting Hawaii: The study estimated the probability of a 9+ Magnitude earthquake in the Aleutian Islands, and its power to create a mega-tsunami in Hawai'i.

In West Maui, an avid swimmer dies in a shark attack at Ahihi Kinau: Friends say 65-year-old Margaret "Margo" Cruse used to work as a volunteer interpretive guide at the very site where she lost her life while snorkeling with friends.
