Parks and Recreation Director Cindy Shook says portions of the walking path and playground have been washed out, and several feet of debris are scattered throughout the park. The tennis courts and the skateboard park however remain open. Citizen volunteers worked to restore the park after flooding in June, and city officials are looking at a similar effort this time. In January, Governor Matt Blunt decided not to run for a second term in office. But, he's hinting that he might run for another office in the future. At the press conference, Blunt was asked what he planned to do with the money left over from what would have been his bid for re-election. He said that it might be used for a future run for office. He won't be spending all the leftover money now, but may give some to other gubernatorial candidates. It is estimated that there is a million dollars or more in Blunt's campaign coffers.
