“RATTLESNAKE SEASON” – Griffith Park -

As springtime calls people and snakes alike to the outdoors, encounters with snakes become inevitable. California has a variety of snakes, most of which are benign. The exception is California's only native venomous snake - the rattlesnake. On Thursday, April 1, 2015, a Fontana resident took a Pug mix, named "Dug" on a hike in the Jurupa Hills trails. A rattlesnake bit the dog in the face while along the hike with its owner in tow. The dogs' face became swollen and its owner called 9-1-1 immediately. This is the latest in rattlesnake incidents, authorities remind everyone to be vigilant when out in nature, especially during this time of warm weather.

Jerry Brown ordered statewide urban water use reductions of 25 percent during the drought's fourth year, Metropolitan's board will consider restricting supplies to the district's member agencies and their retailers partly based on their dependency on MWD's imported supplies, while taking into account other local supply sources and conservation actions. If approved, the allocation would start July 1 and help further reduce water use and stretch available supplies, especially during the upcoming hot summer months. Limiting supplies is among the tools Metropolitan will use to support the governor's order. Other actions include conservation programs, local water supply development, and working with the state

The Los Angeles Police Department has submitted its proposed procedures for the use and deployment of body worn video by uniformed police officers to the Board of Police Commissioners for its consideration. The proposed order requires officers to record investigative and enforcement contacts with members of the public and contains provisions to maintain the integrity of criminal and administrative investigations. In addition, the proposed order protects the privacy rights and civil liberties of the community and Department personnel while enabling officers to collect reliable evidence for use in criminal prosecutions, use of force and citizen complaint investigations, and other reviews and examinations. The proposed order is a result of extensive outreach efforts and careful consideration of a variety of ideas, opinions, and concerns expressed by a broad spectrum of stakeholders. The Department consulted with several community groups, employee organizations, union representatives, privacy advocates, department personnel, legal experts, academics, prosecutors and law enforcement agencies in developing the proposed procedures. In addition, the procedures are informed by the LAPD's experience in using Digital In-Car Video in South Los Angeles for the past five years. The Board of Police Commissioners will consider the Department's proposal at its regularly scheduled meeting today.

Lifeguards in Newport Beach are bracing for big waves that they say could top 15 feet at the Wedge and along the Balboa Peninsula this weekend. A large storm hundreds of miles to the south, typically not seen until midsummer, is expected to create the potentially dangerous conditions along the coast, according to lifeguard Capt. Jon Mitchell. "We've just been having some very strange and different weather," he told Times Community News. The biggest swells are expected to hit south-facing beaches Sunday and Monday before tapering off Tuesday, according to the National Weather Service.

Former Undersheriff Paul Tanaka, who is the mayor of the city of Gardena, was indicted Wednesday on federal charges after a month's long grand jury proceeding. Nepalese rescuers on Friday found three bodies near the wreckage of a U.S. Marine helicopter that disappeared this week during a relief mission in the earthquake-hit Himalayan nation, and officials said it was unlikely there were any survivors from the crash. Eric Seaman, a Marine from Murrieta, has been reported to be among the crew on the missing helicopter. People at the address listed for Seaman declined to comment Wednesday to The Press-Enterprise. Relatives of Seaman who are posting on Facebook about the helicopter also have declined to comment to the media. At the Seaman residence in Murrieta, the mood was somber as members of his family and his friends waited for more details about the discovery of the helicopter. In front of the door, a handwritten note posted by the family asked for members of the news media to respect the family's privacy. On social media outlets, friends, neighbors and family members offered up prayers of support and expressed hope for Seaman's safe return. The helicopter was carrying six Marines and two Nepalese army soldiers. A separate team sent by the U.S. Marines said they identified the wreckage as the missing helicopter, the UH-1 "Huey."

Federal, state and local officials were responding to a 4-mile-wide oil slick that poured from a ruptured pipeline into the waters off Refugio State Beach in Santa Barbara County on Tuesday. A pungent smell wafted across the coastline from the spilled oil on the popular beach about 20 miles west of downtown Santa Barbara. U.S. Coast Guard crews were responding to an “unknown sheen” at Refugio, the guard’s Los Angeles/Long Beach office Twitter account initially stated. The sheen was from a ruptured pipeline on the shore side that had been “secured,” the Coast Guard office later confirmed in a tweet. Houston-based Plains All-American Pipeline was later as the “responsible party.” The company did not immediately respond to a request for comment. Aerial video from Sky5 showed a large amount of dark oil in the water and on the sand, workers were treating a spill in a field on the other side of the 101 Freeway from the beach. About 21,000 gallons had flowed into the ocean, the Los Angeles Times reported, citing Coast Guard officials.

The Los Angeles City Council tentatively agreed Tuesday to raise the city's minimum wage to $15 per hour, joining a trend sweeping cities across the country as elected leaders seek to address stagnating pay for workers on the lowest rungs of the socio-economic ladder. The ordinance would boost the $9 an hour base wage to $15 by 2020 for as many as 800,000 workers, city officials say, and make L.A. the largest U.S. city to adopt a major minimum-wage increase. Chicago, San Francisco and Seattle already have adopted similar laws. Tuesday's 14-1 vote was the latest demonstration of organized labor's clout at City Hall. Through close to a year of often-emotional debate, labor leaders never gave ground on their central demand that the minimum wage rise to at least $15. Their City Council allies ensured that a less far-reaching wage increase proposed by Mayor Eric Garcetti to allay concerns in the business community was marginalized in the final months of discussion.
