We interviewed Hot Rodders owner Amber Chaffin right before the closure and at the three month mark of the closure. Shortly after reopening, the city announced they would need to close the bridge for a few weekends for more maintenance work. The first weekend closure was in the beginning of March. Then the unthinkable happened -- a pandemic. They only had a month of normal business. Now -- Hot Rodders and other restaurants in most parts in the commonwealth are getting the green light. Their dining room is allowed to operate at 50 percent capacity. The owner now has hope and sees the light at the end of the tunnel.

We know you have questions. So we got answers from an expert. Maneuvering money matters on top of an emotionally exhausting health crisis can seem so cruel, more like a necessary evil in tough times. Everyone's trying to figure out what's next. Whether you're just trying to stretch a dollar to the end of the week or you're figuring out how best to invest. But experts say if you're already in the market, stay there.

We are just getting over a national pandemic. Individuals do not have jobs but we cannot destroy our own community. Black Lives Matter says it denounces the kind of property damage that happened at Peninsula Town Center. Leader Aubrey Japharii Jones says a splinter group was trying to pass themselves off as his organization. He explained what BLM757 stands for when they demonstrate. They want police to adopt a three-step process for abusive officers beginning with a warning, Then disciplinary action and then up to termination for a third offense.

We spoke with Melvina Sumter and Narketta Sparkman-Key, who both work at the university. They tell me there's similarities between these protests and the ones back in the 60s. There's a diverse group of people marching, and young people are also making sure their voices are heard. But what's different, and what caused the wake-up call for many, was the video of George Floyd being pinned to the ground with an officer's knee on his neck. With social media and the ability to video tape everything to get it out to millions of people in seconds, the narrative has really changed.

But of the 50 states, Virginia has ranked 40th or worse per capita in testing. It's a combination of a poor start, a lack of resources at the outset, and a supply chain with some woefully weak links. The state needed more testing capacity when COVID cases began to mount. The state of Virginia has partnered with UVA, VCU and Sentara here in Hampton Roads to get more tests completed more quickly. Sentara started by processing a few dozen tests a day, but lab director Eric Young saw the curve growing steeper in March and April. By the end of May, Sentara had processed 30 thousand COVID tests. The health commissioner says Virginia is now on a path to more tests, and a more accurate picture of the spread of COVID.

Newby-Alexander is the Dean of the College of Liberal Arts and a Professor of History at Norfolk State University. She says the Portsmouth monument was erected in the 1870s at the public square which was used to transport and punish slaves. The monument in Norfolk is at the former site of a slave market and both were in close proximity to old City Hall buildings. Newby-Alexander says this was done to continue to instill the atmosphere of a slave society long after the war. And that the monuments didn't go up until General Robert E. Lee died because he was opposed to them. She said he understood what he did. He understood the ramifications of the Civil War and the impact on our Constitution and society. He did not want people to glorify what happened during the Civil War in terms of people moving away from supporting the government

Mayor John Rowe told the Court it is more cost effective to do a regional jail rather than a city jail. Sheriff Michael Moore testified that he has a sworn duty to serve and protect the citizens of Portsmouth - and that includes the ones who are incarcerated. For that reason he doesn't want his inmates going to the regional jail because he feels the quality of care there is substandard. As one of five cities that participate in the Hampton Roads Regional Jail, Portsmouth pays for the use of 250 beds there. But it uses just 20 of those beds, so at that rate it's paying more than six million dollars annually for unused beds. Sheriff Michael Moore hasn't sent any inmates there since January 2019. Ralph Northam says this is because Virginians have followed the guidelines of social distancing, hand washing, and use of facial protection. Here's what Governor Northam announced for Phase Three: Gatherings of up to 250 people will be allowed. Capacity restrictions on restaurants and stores will be lifted, but physical distancing will still be required. Zoos and museums can open at 50 percent capacity. Gyms can go up to 75 percent capacity. Overnight summer camps are still closed.

Inside this building, election officials have been working all day to figure out what happened yesterday and how to make sure nothing like that happens come November. The issue was with the electronic poll books not the voting machines themselves. The poll books are what's used to check in voters - verify identity and voter registration. While officials worked to fix the problem, voters were given provisional ballots. Election officials say there was at least 46,000 provisional ballots, maybe more, given out. They're in the process of counting them all.

17	Children and Youth Community COVID-19	6p	6/24/2020	95 seconds	WAVY News 10 at 6pm	No Kid Hungry Virginia: Capacity is limited because of the Coronavirus, but shared laughs and shared meals are not. The Southside Boys and Girls Club partners with the Foodbank to provide breakfast, lunch, and backpacks full of food to the kids and teens so when they leave the club, they have something in their stomach. Nonprofit No Kid Hungry Virginia helps coordinate meal distribution sites, like the Southside Boys and Girls Club, across the state. Summer can be one of the hungriest times of the year for students who rely on free and reduced lunch during the school year. For the last few years, the agency has used a text message line to direct people to nearby meal distribution sites. This year, they activated it early in mid-March to help with pandemic response.
17	Consumer Issues	6p	6/25/2020	145 seconds	WAVY News 10 at 6pm	Mother Linda Brewer tells me her son thought he was getting paid to get an advertisement wrapped around his car. Instead, they received a fake check and lost thousands. She is spreading the word to watch out for scammers. She says back in May, her son was communicating with the company he thought was Blue Bell Ice Cream. He had been working at having a deal where he would have his car wrapped and they would pay him three to four hundred dollars a week. He was also sent a check for $3500 - $3000 to send to the company to wrap his car and $500 to keep. He forwarded the money to the company, and then found the check was fake. The scam was reported to the FTC and the Newport News Police Department.

Covis Pharma is the company doing the study. They are working to see if their drug Alvesco will work to help someone who has Coronavirus. Alvesco typically is used by inhaler. The drug won't prevent the virus but could alleviate some of the inflammation in the lungs.
17	Senior Issues Community COVID-19	5p	6/26/2020	70 seconds	WAVY News 10 at 5pm	Keeping seniors safe from COVID-19 is a top priority as they are one of the most susceptible groups. But social distancing can lead to feelings of loneliness and depression-- and one local senior care service provider wanted to help ease that pain. Home Instead in Newport News is connecting local seniors with community members during this time through personalized letters, videos, and even art from a pen pal. The Pen Pal Program has a little twist, as the letters are written and sent digitally to prevent the spread of germs. Some of the seniors need a little help with reading the letters and even writing their own but it's a gesture that brings a big smile.

17	Business Economy COVID-19	6p	6/27/2020	65 seconds	WAVY News 10 at 6pm	Highlighting different entrepreneurs in the area, that was the goal Brittany Coley set out to achieve. She says as a small business owner herself, she knows how COVID-19 has impacted small businesses. So she started the first Vendor Round up at the Backyard which is a new private venue in the area. The goal is to highlight different entrepreneurs in the area basically bringing businesses to help them out during the pandemic. Around 18 black-owned small business owners came out to the event. The different businesses were spaced out throughout the yard. Coley says she wanted to do her part and bring everyone together to unite and support the small businesses the area has to offer.
17	Minority Issues Law Enforcement	4p	6/29/2020	100 seconds	WAVY News 10 at 4pm	Tonight at 7 about 50 people plan to sit on the grassy area at Norfolk City Hall to call for action from Norfolk council members. They want the Norfolk Police Department to release its use of force reports. Organizers say they will camp out for as long as it takes to ask for increased accountability and transparency from Norfolk Police. State law gives Norfolk Police the ability to choose whether to make those records public. Raymond Brothers, Norfolk Sit-In Organizer said that we're not asking for addresses or any personal information. As a community, we are asking who the police officers are who have a use of force problem. Brothers says that they have talked to Chief Larry Boone in the past few weeks. He marched and answered questions from protesters a few weeks ago. Boone has said that he asks his officers to rely on their training and do the right thing.

They want the Norfolk Police Department to release its use of force reports. Organizers say they will camp out for as long as it takes to ask for increased accountability and transparency from Norfolk Police. State law gives Norfolk Police the ability to choose whether to make those records public. Tyler Woodard is one of the organizers says this event may lead to more transparency, accountability and open dialogue between police and the citizens. Norfolk Police Chief Larry Boone isn't opposed to releasing use of force documents though he wants to make sure there is a proper process in place. Boone says his department is exploring ways to make the process right which could include having an outside party decide what should be released. Organizers say this sit in tonight could become an Occupy situation where they stay here for days or weeks.

17	Community	5p	6/29/2020	90 seconds	WAVY News 10 at 5pm	The next time you're at Macarthur Center, you might notice this new storefront. It's called the Community Feed at TCC and that's exactly what they're doing - feeding free healthy food options to TCC students who are battling food insecurity. Students can come to this farmer's market and pick up meal kits. They will also be offered info about affordable housing, quality healthcare, workforce development, higher ed as well as financial literacy. There are so many things our community members and residents can learn. Right now, the store will open on Tuesdays and Thursdays but it will eventually expand.
17	Politics Local Government	4p	6/30/2020	75 seconds	WAVY News 10 at 4p	The big issue today is if the Onley Town Council acted properly when it went into closed session to discuss the mayor. Council members say they did; the mayor says it didn't. Matt Hart says he was told about a special closed-door meeting by council in mid-May. He decided he would not go. May 19th- the council met behind closed doors. A couple weeks later during the regular session the council passed a resolution reprimanding Hart. Council members say he is verbally abusive and created a hostile work environment. Hart says there is no evidence that is the case. He tells 10 on Your Side, he didn't want to take his fellow council members to court but he felt it was the only place he could get back his good name. The judge told both sides he was going to look at the evidence and have a written decision soon.as possible.

17	Minority Issues Law Enforcement	5p	6/30/2020	90 seconds	WAVY News 10 at 5p	Norfolk City Hall Sit-In: This is Norfolk City Manager Chip Filer talking with some of those sitting in at Norfolk City Hall. While friendly, the participants of the sit-in and the camping is to send a message Norfolk to release the individual use of force reports for the Norfolk Police Department. Filer said that there could be 16,000 of them and he said that while he is unwilling to release 16,000 reports, he gets what they want -transparency. The City Council members are interested in an informational Dashboard that shows actual statistics as well as an analysis done by an outside entity that helps us improve how we police. By state law, police departments are not required to release the actual use of force reports, but the sit-in may already be successful in bringing attention to a perceived problem.
