For some families, the shutdown drove disillusionment with public school curriculum, prompting a leap to homeschooling. Whether you homeschool or embrace distance learning, experts insist that school-at-home can indeed work for you. Our Billie Branham reports. Guests: "Keeping it simple" is key says Arlene Pellicane, mom, author and host of Accessmore podcast A Happy Home. "Master the basics. Just focus on like two things that would help this distance learning thing work." As homeschoolers, parents take full responsibility for what their children learn, a method mentor and coach Kayla Weller finds effective, flexible and fun. "You can teach them what they're interested in and there's no set rules for how to teach," and "you would be surprised how much kids absorb when you take the time work with them."

Healthcare	Local Closer Look	1/17/21, 2/14/21, 3/14/21	7:30pm	20min	Kaillie McKnight, Executive Director - First Choice for Women. Unplanned pregnancy continues to be an issue in this community. Ms. McKnight talked about her background and how she became involved in issues related to unplanned pregnancy and then became involved at First Choice for Women (FCW). She then talked about their professional staff, nurse manager and medical director, with limited ultrasound. FCW also has Biblical post-abortion counseling. Ms. McKnight told listeners what they can do to encourage and counsel women who are experiencing an unplanned pregnancy. It's very important to include the father of the child in this process "because Joseph held the Baby, too." They also talk to parents of minor girls/children and counsel them as well. She then talked about ways the community can partner with FCW and how to contact them.
Animal Therapy	Closer Look	1/24/21	7:00pm	16min	Tails Wag for People In Need: Canines For Christ Dogs have a special place in our hearts. Animals classified as canines (K9s) have rightfully earned the title 'man's best friend' through centuries of companionship, comfort and unmatched service to humanity. Even people who prefer cats have to admit, dogs are pretty special. "Most of us know, people that pet dogs, the dog provides comfort, they get happy when they do -- and so we wanna make people happy," says Chaplain Ron Leonard with for Canines for Christ. Dogs who sign up with Canines for Christ take car rides with their families to visit sick people in cancer wards, lonely people in nursing homes, stressed people in police stations, forgotten people in prisons and anywhere else tails need to wag. "Our dogs have been able to break through depression to assure people that God really does love them and care for them," which Leonard says lifts people to better health physically, emotionally and spiritually.

Animal Rescue	Closer Look	1/24/20	7:16pm	14min	Dog Is Their Co-Pilot: Pittsburgh Aviation Animal Rescue (PAART) Co-pilots Jon Plesset and Brad Childs fly single-engine planes based out of Pittsburgh, PA. Their passengers never complain about leg room, and with four-legs each, they would likely have a lot to say. Instead, these travelers typically wag their tails and offer up grateful licks for landing a one-way flight for life. The co-founders of Pittsburgh Aviation Animal Rescue Team (PAART) didn't set out to use their 1974 Piper Warrior to relocate dogs from overcrowded shelters, but one phone call back in 2009 changed the game. "Our first thought was, 'why would you fly an animal in your airplane?," admits Plesset but "when we learned this animal was gonna be euthanized if it didn't get a ride to Philadelphia, we knew right away this was something we could be passionate about." Plesset and Childs adopted the motto, "No Dog Left Behind," and combining their love of flying with their love of animals they created a non-profit network of shelters and pilots. PAART mostly serves states in the eastern U.S. and Midwest but has big dreams for nationwide expansion. Costs are covered solely by donations and sponsorships and until they can afford a bigger plane, flights are limited to 250nm (nautical miles).

That's one example of the many questions Dr. Kevin Jones has been tasked with answering. The questions come from kids and the response needs to be age-appropriate for children in elementary school. The kids' curiosity about faith is part of a three-year video mission for LifeWay's "The Gospel Project," a curriculum used by many churches and Christian schools. Dr. Jones comes well qualified. He's dean and assistant professor of education at Cedarville University and also has a background in elementary education. Filming for the 108 videos is taking place at the university's Ohio campus. Dr. Jones tells us he is very deliberate about his approach to responding to a kid's question. "What does the Bible say about this question? Because the Bible is our final authority, right? Because what the kid doesn't need is my thoughts." When we asked him about children asking pretty bold and direct questions, Dr. Jones smiled and said, "Yes, that's the beauty!" He believes kids usually have a "heart posture...of pureness and sincerity" when they ask honest questions.

They were on the long trek to raise awareness and funding for a Dream Center project in Colorado City, once home to an infamous polygamous leader. Just past 500 miles into the hike, Luke and Annalee climbed down at a tricky point on the trail and saw a boulder start to move! Luke immediately went into dad mode and pushed his daughter out of the way, "thinking I could get out of the way as well, but it caught me." The boulder, estimated to weigh 8,000 pounds, "rolled me for about 15, 20 feet [headfirst]," but then, "it teetered upon a rock, somehow miraculously, so my daughter could pull me out." "I broke my femur, I broke my hip, I broke my forearm, three ribs and lots of stitches and bandages along the way." Incredibly, the boulder onslaught did not derail the Barnetts' mission. All the media attention to the close brush with death led to massive interest in the Short Creek Dream Center and saw $2,000,000 raised...instead of the hoped for $1,000,000! At this point in our story, it would seem reasonable to point to this particular Bible verse: "And we know that God causes everything to work together for the good of those who love God and are called according to his purpose for them." (Romans 8:28 NLT)

In times of war, soldiers know they may even be required to make the ultimate sacrifice. At another level, military families face situations most other families don't. For example, the majority of military families move every two-to-three years. For children, this could mean moving up to six times by the formative age of 12! That's a lot of change: new schools, making new friends, losing old friends, and learning how a new unknown community works. To come alongside the millions of children whose parent (or parents) serve, the American Bible Society's specialized branch, Armed Services Ministry, has launched "Hero Squad."

But how? "There were families that were quarantining and families that were going through hardship, losing jobs temporarily, and now we know – permanently – for a lot of them," explains Community Impact Pastor Brandon Champagne. Realizing the church possessed a commercial grade kitchen, professional Chef Greg Reynolds teamed with church staff to launch what would become the "The Kindness Kitchen." To date, more than 9,000 free meals have been provided; many to single moms, those in need, and frontline workers, but also to those who just needed some encouragement. In one case, they were able to bless a single mom and her 12 children!

They're a cute diversion from the routine of a normal school day but it's also serving a vital purpose. The pups are being trained at Wimberley High to become diabetic alert dogs. Tiffany Black is the agriculture science teacher. Black says, "Three of my students are partnered with three puppies. So, it's their responsibility to care for the puppies. They get to take them home. They're responsible for that basic training and socialization. And then they bring those puppies to school and we work with them in our classrooms, continuing those basic techniques." The students take the dogs home, to school and anywhere else they go to expose them to many different situations. Training service dogs is fun but also comes with giant responsibilities.

"We've really looked at how to maintain that school culture that we're used to...and to be honest, during this COVID season, it's hard." Brian knew it was important for the teaching staff to come together, with social distancing, and laugh and have some fun. One way to keep the school spirit in high gear was something the principal designated as The Rise & Shine Challenge. "We've been dealt a bad hand with COVID, like everyone, but we're going to make the best of a bad situation." Five minutes after teachers arrive at 8:00 a.m., a message blares on the school intercom: "It's now time for a Rise & Shine Challenge! Make your way down to the commons and let's have some fun." Teachers take part in a wide variety of games like Let's Make a Deal, Deal or No Deal, and Press Your Luck. The staff has also enjoyed Name That Song. Winners get some nice perks, like leaving work 30 minutes early. But Brian shares, "Not all of our prizes are good prizes...they may win an autographed picture of me, the principal, or an autographed picture of our superintendent or assistant principal," he smiles.

Thank You" – After 17 Years, Army Vet Catches Up with Kids Who Encouraged Him with Letters Sent to Iraq It was 2003. Nearly 200,000 American troops were in Iraq. This resulted in the removal of dictator Saddam Hussein and led to an extended deployment of allied forces in the region. Among those was West Virginia soldier Mark Bland. At the time, many school children were urged to write letters of encouragement to soldiers they knew and even those they didn't. Ways were arranged to get the letters and packages to the troops. Mark recalls, "We were getting care packages and troop fan mail from all over the country and these would be from kids in second grade to full-grown adults just saying, 'Hey we're praying for you guys, we're thinking about you...We'd love to pray for you...You guys are our heroes, what do you do over there? How's the sandstorms?'" Fast-forward 17 years, Mark admits he never had the time to sit down and go through all the letters he had saved. One day recently, Mark was thanking his wife, Hannah, for all the letters she had mailed him in Iraq – more than 300 letters - when she was still his girlfriend. They looked at her letters and then the letters from all the school kids. "And I said, you know what would be a really cool project, to be able to use social media and try to find some of these kids and show them their letter and really just say 'thank you' for thinking of me back in 2003." And that's exactly what Mark is doing today at his Facebook blog site, P.S. Thank You. So far, Mark has been able to connect with 15 students, who are full-grown adults now, as well as some of the teachers who helped organized the letter-writing efforts.

Mental Health	Closer Look	2/14/21	7:00pm	28in	Help for Kids Suffering Sadness, Anxiety in Pandemic The digital age exposes modern kids to bad news and bitter opinions their parents never knew. “Social media, media, news, political unrest, all these things that once kids were mostly sheltered from – now they’re seeing them 24 hours a day,” notes Julie Lowe, licensed counselor and author of Childproof and Building Bridges: Biblical Counseling for Children and Teens. The barrage of mystifying information crowds into their minds alongside the other considerable pressures of growing up. This overload can drive kids into dangerous states of anxiety or depression. Suicides among young children have been steadily rising the last decade. The COVID19 pandemic made a dire situation even worse.

Girls are more likely to attempt to take their own lives. Boys are more likely to succeed. Triggers include bullying, loss of a parent due to death or divorce, family history of depression or becoming convinced that no one in the world knows or understands them.

Faith	Closer Look	2/21/21	7:13pm	16min	'Call-In' Bible Studies Connect to Faith and Friendship When COVID-19 forced churches to close and halted even small social gatherings, Christians continued to crave interaction with fellow believers. Soldiers For Faith Ministries launched 'call-in' bible studies back in 2012, but stay-at-home orders in 2020 crystalized the ministry purpose and mission. "When the pandemic hit," says founder Kelly McAndrew, "all of a sudden we understood what God had prepared us for." Headquartered in Texas, with facilitators in New Jersey, Florida and Colorado, all Soldiers For Faith bible studies are by-phone only. They deliberately avoid video. "There's something about just picking up the telephone, not having that judgement," explains McAndrew. "It's just absolutely pure to be on the phone, to hear people's voices, to hear their hearts." While the pandemic forced millions into unexpected solitude, McAndrew points to the millions of people with health limitations or disabilities who live that kind of isolation every day. Soldiers For Faith currently has about 25 ongoing studies, running one hour in length, all days of the week, early morning to night. The ministry is always looking for new group leaders to add more study options.
Finances	Closer Look	2/28/21	7:00pm	29min	Families Living on One-Income, Possible? Families with two working parents sometimes wonder – could we make it if one of us lost our job? "We live in a culture that I would call a 'two-income world,'" says budgeting expert Mary Hunt. She readily admits the challenges of living on one income. "But here's the good news – yes! yes you can do this." Once a family has decided to test the waters of change, Hunt recommends a 7-Day Cash Diet for everyday expenses like gas and groceries. Buying in cash for a while "is the best way to pull in the reigns to manage your money in a reasoned way." The next step is adding up what that second income is actually costing you. Expenses like gas to get to the job, daycare for the kids even the fast food you buy because you are too tired to cook – every dollar associated with working must be subtracted from the net pay. "What is the 'real hourly wage' of that second income?" Hunt says people are often shocked that their second income boils down to actually just $1 or $2 an hour and may be pushing them into a higher tax bracket. But can a family live – and happy and healthy on what seems to be less money per month? Hunt firmly believes they can. "You can't do this overnight," she cautions, as "sometimes parents need to go through a whole process of deciding who is going to be the one who gives up the formal income and how to make that one income stretch twice as far." Then you may have to get out of debt to pave the way, "which means you have to stop using the credit cards." And finally, she says, resist peer pressure to live beyond your means.

That's the case with a ministry called Cancer Companions. When it comes to the anxiety that often accompanies a cancer diagnosis, Matthew looks at it this way: "I really think it does revolve around that word uncertainty. The unknown. A cancer diagnosis means you're about to walk a road. It's a road you've never walked before and you don't know how long that road is going to take you. You don't know what's on the other side of it, so my heart goes out to anybody who's dealing with a cancer diagnosis," Matthew speaks from his heart.

"He was so afraid. And I knew that he wasn't doing well and he looked at me with so much fear in his eyes and he just kept asking me, 'Please tell me...am I going to live or am I going to die? And at that point, I just took his hand and I knew that we were about to intubate him...once you get intubated, your survival rate was probably 10-to-20%...a really poor chance of making it through that." Leilani's response was honest and bold. "I took his hands and I looked him in the eye with all my gear on – I know all he could see was my eyes – so to be able to express what I was going to say meant so much at that point to calm him down...and I just said to him 'I don't know if you're going to die. I can't promise you anything, but I know that we're going to take great care of you, and I know that Jesus is here with you in this room right now.'" Leilani then led him through a salvation prayer. That patient passed away two weeks later. Leilani realizes that ICU patients are often sedated or in a medically-induced coma, "but I know that their spirit is still there and I just begin speaking to their spirit and whatever God has on my heart to speak to them at that moment, I say it to them. I do that quite often." How can people encourage healthcare workers? Leilani says nurses and other medical professionals were referred to as "heroes" when the pandemic first began, but in the media and culture, that has faded some. So, "When you see them, thank them and let them know that you still remember...and the sacrifices that they've made mean something." Nurses on the front lines, "They have a loss of hope, watching patients die constantly, they need our prayers."

A woman in the activity room held a guitar and was starting to sing "In the Sweet By and By." At first, Gerald says, "I kind of felt sorry for her because the audience (of nursing home residents) was disengaged. But, by the time she got to the chorus, they were trying to sing along! And it reminded me of how special the old hymns are to our senior adults." Because Gerald had been involved in Gospel Music Hymn Sings at a number of churches, he had access to complete DVDs recorded live at church settings. So to test the waters, he began shipping free-of-charge DVDs to nursing homes, and the response was "just overwhelming," smiles Gerald. "The cards, the notes, and the emails from these folks who are so often forgotten about." He reveals that especially during the COVID crisis, where visits from family have been restricted, the music DVDs have been a definite blessing, a lifeline to God. To date, through Operation Sing Again, the ministry has sent DVDs to nearly 16,000 care facilities around the nation. Gerald points out that only two nursing homes have declined the offer. Worth noting, Gerald tells us, even some nursing homes that offer services primarily to people of the Jewish faith, have been receptive.

Prisoners in many county jails couldn't boil water, so they risk drinking water directly from the tap. And toilets can't be flushed, so that's a huge issue in jails and many homes. Water Mission, a Christian engineering organization, has extensive experience in identifying and solving drinking water issues overseas. They help with disaster relief, like after earthquakes and hurricanes, and also operate community development projects. So now, in an unusual geographical switch for Water Mission, the non-profit is organizing efforts to help Texas residents. The group happens to have key staff members who reside in the Austin area, and Water Mission is cooperating with the Austin Disaster Response Network and Plumbers Without Borders to bring people badly-needed professional help.

"Victims begin questioning reality and their own sanity," she explains, herself a survivor of domestic abuse – and a Christian – who knows firsthand what's it like to 'live it.' Pastor Paul Cole, president of the Christian Men's Network, has been deeply concerned by the quarantine effect on families already stuffed in a pressure cooker of unhealthy reactions. "A lot of times, we as men act out of anger, rage, disappointment – and we lash out at people," he says, and urges men in this trap to reach out for help. RELATED LINKS: The National Domestic Abuse Hotline 1-800-799-7233 https://www.thehotline.org/ The MEND Project - Educate. She brought the idea to her mom, Heidi, and her elementary school principal. If a child sits on a Buddy Bench, it's a signal to others that they want someone to play with. Sammie knows what it's like to be lonely or shy. Following the meeting, Sammie and her mom discovered a new bench would cost $900. The project was too expensive to pull off until it was discovered a local company could make the bench out of recycled materials for a quarter of the cost. Sammie started collection of plastic bottle caps and lids. These materials would go into making new Buddy Benches. Sammie is now 12. She has helped install three benches at her school and 150 benches across the country. And has a book coming out in the fall.

We’re just five months old and we’re always looking for ways that we can engage with people, connect with people, build community – and we became aware of a YouTube influencer who had purchased space on a NASA rover that’s going to the moon.” He offered fans an opportunity to send him a picture or video that would be placed in a digital time capsule that will be on that rover. “And so we thought, ‘You know what, let’s do that. Let’s build some memories here. Let’s do something fun and creative – particularly when physical distancing is such a challenge.’ We thought, ‘Let’s get together. Let’s do a Zoom call and let’s take a picture together... and send that image to the moon!’”

But as he works with horses, he is constantly reminded of God. "The more I'm around horses, I see the beauty of how they are created and how we interact with them. And one of my little personal theories is that I believe God created the horse just for us to ride. They are perfectly suited, as no other animal is in creation, to carry us from place to place," he marvels. Because of that, some of his YouTube videos are in a series called "Sermon by Horse." One teaching is called "Boundaries: This mustang needs boundaries, even if he doesn't want them. So do we."

"It was there that my mom got addicted to drugs... and it was hard growing up. You know, we didn't have a lot of food in the refrigerator... going to school, not really having a lot of things, being talked about...that was kind of my day-to-day." But then, things got even worse. After school one day, Robert saw "all of our stuff was setting on the side of the road [evicted]. And it was in that moment that things kind of changed for me as a little boy and I kind of turned into a man." Robert found that selling drugs provided money. Gang membership also gave him some meaning, or so he thought. "I wanted to be successful by all means, whether it was the right way or the wrong way." In time, things caught up with him and he served five years in prison. "My dad died in prison when I was 16. And so that reality, coupled with me being a father and a husband at the time, I knew I didn't want my legacy to be that of my father." So in prison, Robert "crafted a plan and strategy so that when I was released, I could be successful." And he meant by legal, entrepreneurial means. And that is exactly where Robert is today. "I'm the CEO of Imperial Cleaning Systems," with nearly two dozen employees and very successful. He has other successful ventures going, too. Robert also created a non-profit called Impact Youth Outreach, a youth development and mentoring program focused on at-risk youth in urban communities.

"I twice went through a journey of being unemployed, and it was that journey that led me to the place where I am today, that is, how do I give back and help others who are going through that journey of unemployment." He says losing a job gives us a chance to pause and think through what our next steps should be; to think where you can best to use your skills, your gifts and abilities in a way you get joy out of your next new job. And trusting God through this process is key. "You'll find the next opportunity, it's just a matter of when. And know that as you go through this process, God's never going to leave you, He's never going to forsake you, He promised to always be with us. But He is going to stretch you. Many homes were not prepared for the powerful blast of cold. Power went out and pipes with little or no insulation froze and burst. "A double whammy," as longtime plumber Paul Mitchell observes. The situation was massive. Some residents had not experienced an actual bath or shower for two weeks. Through several confirmations, it had become very clear to Paul and his wife, Diane, that God wanted them to head to Texas and help people who didn't have safe drinking water, who couldn't take showers, much less use their own toilets. The Mitchells rounded up equipment and, along with their son, headed from Ohio to Austin, Texas. Thanks to their church, friends, and Cedarville University – where Paul retired from, and his wife works - the Mitchells' project and needs were fully funded so they could get down to business, God's business, helping people in trouble.

Lisa and her husband Vince had been praying for a way to serve God and the community. One night, a family friend came over for dinner. Their friend, a local school principal, shared the heartbreaking story of witnessing a second grader digging through the school cafeteria trash and storing the discarded food in her pocket. He knew that she was taking it home for her siblings for the weekend. Thousands of school children throughout the Phoenix metro receive federally subsidized meals for breakfast and lunch during the school week, but often go hungry on the weekends. Lisa knew that she had to help. "'Kitchen on the Street' is a faith-based ministry that my husband and I started out of our house in 2006. We started a 501c3 non-profit so that we could feed these students who were food-insecure on weekends," says founder, Lisa Scarpinato. Kitchen on the Street serves more than 2000 children every year in more than 30 different schools. Ten years ago, they expanded the ministry to San Antonio, Texas. "I felt like as a Christian, a human being, a mother...all the things that you are...that if I had an interest in helping these kids, I knew others would as well," Lisa remembers. Kitchen on the Street volunteers pack "bags of hope," weekend nutrition packs filled with non-perishable food items that children can discreetly put in their backpacks on Fridays to bring home for the weekend.
