If you are going to report the news . . . check your facts

Dear Ted:

Trump's comment "I'll keep you in suspense" was not related to the wall . . . it was his response to whether or not he would accept the outcome of the election win or lose. If you are going to report the new please check your facts and get them right. Please report the news don't create your own. . .

When Donald Trump was asked at the third and final presidential debate if he will accept the outcome of the election, and if he loses, concede to the winner, the real estate mogul refused to say. "I will tell you at the time," said Trump, who has frequently discussed voter fraud and a "rigged" system. "I'll keep you in suspense, okay?" Trump told moderator Chris Wallace.

Good morning, Karen;

Thank you for your email this morning. I am sorry for the confusion with my news story this morning regarding the debate. My highest priority is to be accurate and fair with reporting information that comes from a variety of sources. Sometimes boiling down a 90 minute debate means the facts get pushed together, and that was the case here. After looking back on the way I wrote the story earlier, you were right. It did appear I related Donald Trump's sound clip to his previous remarks about the border wall. I have made the correction.

Thanks again,

Ted
