Problem # 5: ADEM Asks Public To Stop Dripping Faucets After Temperatures Get Above Freezing

After days of bone-chilling weather leading to dripping faucets throughout the Tennessee Valley, the Alabama Department of Environmental Management is now asking residents and businesses to stop the practice once temperatures are above freezing.

On Monday, ADEM said several public water systems in the state have been experiencing excessive water loss and are struggling to keep up with consumer demand.

As frozen pipes thaw, leaks are also making the issue worse. ADEM said the public can help by checking for leaks inside and outside the home or business. If you find a leak, shut off the water supply until it is repaired.

If you have a major leak and are not able to shut off the water supply, contact your local water company for help.

Problem # 7: Why We Give

Giving Tuesday is an opportunity to reflect on generosity. Though an overwhelming majority of evangelicals believe tithing 10% is a biblical command, the average evangelical only gives around 4% of their income on a yearly basis. Even that number is distorted by a few high-end donors, as Grey Matter research discovered. About half of American evangelicals give less than 1% to church or charity. This means that many Christians have never experienced the joy of generosity. Jesus wasn't kidding when He said that "where your treasure is, there your heart will be also."

Consumerism is, for many of us, a shallow form of worship. Generosity, by contrast, reflects God who generously created the world and, in Christ, generously gave Himself for us. When we give, we reflect Him, by comforting the hurting, clothing the poor, and building His Church.

So, please, on this Giving Tuesday, give. And wherever you give, give generously
