Each of the Apostle Paul’s letters to different first-century churches contains robust explanations of complex theological concepts, such as justification, sanctification, the connection between faith and works, and the role of Jewish law after Christ. In more than a few places, however, Paul drops punchy and simple statements such as, “If anyone is not willing to work, let him not eat” (2 Thessalonians 3:10). That’s straightforward. Or how about this one: “If anyone does not provide for his relatives, and especially for members of his household, he has denied the faith and is worse than an unbeliever” (1 Timothy 5:8). That’s pretty clear, too. Obviously, these statements have clear implications for husbands and fathers who abandon their spouses or children, or who fail to do what is necessary to provide for them. Today, these would also seem to indict those who pressure women into aborting a child they fathered; or those who, through IVF, create multiple embryos only to abandon some of them in freezers; or those who pressure aging parents into physician-assisted suicide. The implications of Paul’s blunt and powerful statement about the responsibilities we have to those who depend on us are vast. Few words better encapsulate what it means to be created in the image of God than stewardship. Human beings were created by God to steward the world He made. He charged our first parents with tending His garden. Though Sin made that task more difficult, it hasn’t altered His original command to His image bearers to “be fruitful and multiply and fill the earth and subdue it.” In fact, this was how He intended for us to rule benevolently and wisely over all the works of God’s hands.

Recently in Vox, journalist Rachel Cohen attempted to explain how “millennials learned to dread motherhood.” Noting the troubling drop in global fertility rates, Cohen spoke to dozens of women about whether they hoped to become or hoped to avoid becoming moms. Today, the question of whether to have kids generates anxiety far more intense than your garden-variety ambivalence. For too many, it inspires dread. I know some women who have decided to forgo motherhood altogether—not out of an empowered certainty that they want to remain child-free, but because the alternative seems impossibly daunting. Others are still choosing motherhood, but with profound apprehension that it will require them to sacrifice everything that brings them pleasure. At least part of the dynamic at work here is cultural. Technology and evolving social norms have created the impression that the choice to become parents is simply one among many lifestyle “choices” we make, such as whether to buy or rent, or whether or not to get a dog. And like those choices, we make the choice to have children or not based on convenience, enjoyment, and personal fulfillment. It’s no surprise, then, that motherhood often lands on the losing side of that evaluation. This narrative has roots in second-wave feminism. Unlike early feminism, which was largely about correcting social injustices in pursuit of equal rights for women, second- and especially third-wave feminism went further, presuming that a woman’s value is found entirely in how she compares to and competes with men. In the process, women’s fertility was, in many ways, pathologized, treated as a bug rather than a feature of being a woman. If marriage and having children is seen as merely a means to pleasure, we will be disappointed when these things are difficult, painful, or boring, as they often are. On the other hand, if life has meaning beyond comfort and pleasure, then something can be difficult and worth pursuing at the same time.

As a Washington Post analysis found late last year, home schooling is America’s fastest growing form of education. Around 2.7 million students are home-schooled in America today, up by about a million since before the pandemic. For Washington Post reporters, this is scary. One article described home schooling as a “largely unregulated practice once confined to the ideological fringe,” whose rise in popularity is leading critics “to sound alarms.” In it, an emeritus Harvard Law professor ominously warned, “Policymakers should think, ‘Wow—this is a lot of kids.’ We should worry about whether they’re learning anything.” A school board member from Florida echoed their concern: “Many of these parents don’t have any understanding of education. The price will be very big to us, and to society. But that won’t show up for a few years.” In a Washington Post story from December 2, Peter Jamison recounted the tragic death of an 11-year-old California boy named Roman Lopez, from severe neglect and abuse. Though, as in most such cases, the story involved a broken and blended family—a factor children’s rights activist Katy Faust points out is a consistent risk—according to The Washington Post, the thing to blame was that Lopez’s stepmom said she was home schooling him. “Home education was an easy way to avoid the scrutiny of teachers, principals, guidance counselors,” suggests Jamison. And the Post wasn’t finished. Nine days later, the Post devoted an article aimed at debunking the work of home-school researcher and advocate Brian Ray, who has long argued that home-schoolers out-perform their public-schooled peers. With little content to criticize Ray’s methodology, the Post devoted space to quoting anti-home-schooling activists and Ray’s aggrieved adult daughter.

Many Christian parents worry about how best to pass faith onto their children. Tragically, statistics suggest they are right to worry. In 2020, the Cultural Research Center at Arizona Christian University found that just 2% of millennials, a generation now well into adulthood, have a biblical worldview. That is the lowest of any generation since surveys on the topic began. According to a Lifeway Research report, two-thirds of those who attend church as teenagers will drop out of church as adults. A significant aspect of the battle for the hearts and minds of the next generation has to do with ideas. Helping students think correctly about life and the world, God and themselves, would be hard enough if they weren't also facing such strong cultural headwinds. Simply put, many young people today leave the faith because they lack the necessary immunity from the bad ideas of our culture. Christian parents must not only present truth to their kids; they must find ways to immunize them against lies. The method many Christian parents and churches use to pass on the faith—reinforcement without taking counter ideas seriously—is the one most vulnerable to failure. In fact, it can leave young people more vulnerable to lies, especially in high-pressure environments. It also means that we don't have to give kids all the answers, but they do need to be aware and ready to think for themselves. This requires we give them a framework, or a pattern, of responding to bad ideas thoughtfully and confidently.

Seven years ago this month, National Geographic published an issue that they now refer to as “historic.” With a cover featuring a young boy with long pink hair and pink leggings, they announced a “Gender Revolution.” The newsstand edition featured a different cover, a child and a collection of hip young people with identifying labels, such as “transgender female,” “androgynous,” and “bi-gender.” Our perceptions of those who are transgender, these covers suggested, should not be simply men with a fetish. Rather, embracing new understandings of gender was about the kids. In addition to the articles explaining the emerging “scientific consensus” around these things, and why “gender” is “fluid” and should be thought of as distinct from one’s biology, one article focused on the challenge of “toxic masculinity.” Five others promised that rethinking gender would elevate women. The journalists accurately predicted that a revolution was occurring, even though some who read the issue (me included) thought their announcement premature. However, seven years later, it’s clear that the gender revolution has done everything but elevate women. As child psychiatrist Miriam Grossman, author of Lost in Trans Nation, explains, the number of teen girls “with recent-onset discomfort with their sex is up 4,000 percent [emphasis added].” Especially vulnerable are girls with comorbidities, like autism, an association that even one of the National Geographic articles acknowledged. People who are autistic are three to six times more likely to not identify with their birth sex. Child psychiatrist Dr. Steven Grcevich, the founder and president of a ministry for families with hidden disabilities, called this “[t]he scandal that nobody is talking about ... the vulnerability of kids with pre-existing medical conditions and autism and other developmental disabilities to this gender ideology.” According to Dr. Grossman, this social contagion has been especially driven by social media, which has become a virtual “assembly line” for challenging girls to question their sense of self. Medical professionals jumped in, resulting in a trail of mutilated bodies, sterilization, bone-density loss, and other irreversible damage done. Women have been hurt in other ways too. According to the Telegraph, a male student recently attacked female students in a gender-neutral bathroom. In sports such as in jiu-jitsu and volleyball, girls have been overpowered and injured, not to mention the other issues of fairness of competition, scholarship opportunities, and privacy concerns. There are clear signs that this revolution is slowing. Finland, Sweden, the United Kingdom, and Norway have all drawn back from providing so-called “gender-affirming care” to young people because the science is not settled. Though the Biden Administration seems committed to advancing the revolution by force, in states such as Missouri and Ohio, lawmakers are taking definitive steps to protect children.

One article indicated Trump is worried the Justices will not be supportive of him. Detractors worry the relatively conservative justices (particularly his SCOTUS appointees) will show allegiance to him. Can they be fair and impartial? Should Clarence Thomas’ recuse himself because of his wife’s very public reaction to the last election? Does the 14th Amendment even apply to a former President? What will the SCOTUS do? What do we make of those (including Vivek Ramaswamy and Nikki Haley) calling for Trump to remain on the ballot? A display of constitutional fidelity or political theatre? Would it be suicide to say they rather not have him on the ballot (for whatever reason they might give?) ie ...must they speak the party line, or could they actually say what they think and feel about Trump?

Chuck Colson noted three significant aspects of Dr. King’s work. First, Dr. King was deeply influenced by his Christian faith. Though a series of personal failures are now known to be, sadly, serial, the principles from which he spoke and wrote were undeniably Christian. Reflecting on Dr. King’s time in Birmingham, fighting against segregation and for equal job opportunities for African Americans, Chuck noted the following: During his Birmingham civil rights campaign, Dr. King required every participant to sign a pledge committing to do ten things. The first was to “meditate daily on the teachings and life of Jesus.” Others included the expectation that all participants would “walk and talk in the manner of love, for God is love” and “pray daily to be used by God in order that all men might be free.” To truly understand Martin Luther King, students must learn about his Christian faith. It was at the heart of what he did. In another commentary, Chuck Colson noted how Dr. King understood divine law as the source of human law. King’s greatest demonstration of this was in his “Letter From a Birmingham Jail,” something Chuck Colson often referred to as “the most important legal document of the twentieth century.” Here’s Chuck: King defended the transcendent source of the law’s authority. In doing so he took a conservative Christian view of law. In fact, he was perhaps the most eloquent advocate of this viewpoint in his time, as, interestingly, Justice Clarence Thomas may be today. Writing from a jail cell, King declared that the code of justice is not man’s law: It is God’s law. Imagine a politician making such a comment today. Based on this belief, that God is the ultimate source of law, Dr. King insisted that any unjust law is, in fact, not a law at all. This was the basis of his view of civil disobedience, something that Christians not only could engage in, but must engage in.

In 2023, the Biden administration doubled down on its commitment to radical gender ideology. Federal agencies proposed a slew of regulations pushing the Biden administration’s extreme pro-LGBT agenda in education, employment, and health care at the expense of children’s interests and women’s rights. That agenda, Rachel Morrison suggests in an article at The Federalist, will be back in 2024. For example, plans are already in the works within the Department of Education to impose gender ideology on school sports. Women and girls will be forced to compete with and against men and boys who identify as female. Also, according to Morrison, we can expect the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission to expand a policy that effectively erases women from one of the most distinctively womanly things imaginable, the Pregnant Workers Fairness Act. In addition to avoid using the term woman to describe those who get pregnant, the EEOC “went so far as to use the plural pronouns ‘they’ and ‘their’ multiple times to refer to a singular employee who was pregnant, had a cesarean section, or experienced childbirth.” Also, Morrison expects that the Department of Health and Human Services will “impose incorrect pronouns, bathroom access, and so-called ‘gender transitions’ via disability discrimination law.” Two other initiatives will hit closer to home for more people. First, the federal government is continuing its attempts to ban “non-affirming” potential parents from adoption and fostering, even calling such parents “abusive.” Second, the EEOC, the Department of Health and Human Services, and the State Department have joined forces to enforce compliance on using preferred pronoun and opening bathrooms to people of the opposite sex.

Last week on NBC’s Meet the Press, Joe Biden’s deputy campaign manager, Quentin Fulks, was asked what the president’s top priority would be if reelected. His reply: “First of all: Roe. ... The president has been adamant that we need to restore Roe. It is unfathomable that women today wake up in a country with less rights than their ancestors had years ago.” According to Politico, President Biden’s pro-choice agenda is “the strongest abortion rights platform of any general election candidate,” and the president seems to sense that this is among the very few issues trending in his favor. Of a recent Texas Supreme Court case in which a woman was denied a medical exception for an abortion, the president declared: “No woman should be forced to go to court or flee her home state just to receive the health care she needs. ... This should never happen in America, period.” Judging by the string of pro-life legislative defeats, most recently in the otherwise red Ohio and Virginia, many Americans agree with the president. One Politico analysis concluded, “When abortion rights are on the ballot, they win with voters across the political spectrum—though they don’t always boost Democratic candidates on ballots advocating for them.” In an imminent presidential election that promises to be especially contentious, the received wisdom among progressive candidates is this: Vow to preserve, at all costs, the so-called “right to choose,” and it’s likely that voters will choose me. And make no mistake, abortion is central not only to a progressive political agenda, but to the vision of “freedom” and selfhood this agenda has enshrined in American law and culture. In so many ways, abortion symbolizes the worldview in which autonomy and self-expression are the highest possible values. It’s the logical endpoint of the pursuit of freedom from constraints, devoid of any notion of freedom for a created purpose. Ultimately, the pro-life argument remains unchanged. The preborn are innocent human beings, made in God’s image, and no one should be able to take their lives without cause. In fact, the most basic purpose of government is to protect its citizens’ right to life, and if the government fails to do this, it is failing in the most basic way. Simply put, if killing babies in the womb is not wrong, the very concept of “rights” is a joke.

In the last few years, the credibility of science or, more accurately, scientists, has taken more than a few hits. Take for instance the rush by many doctors, researchers, academics, and medical institutions to force transgender ideology on children. For example, the American Academy of Pediatrics and the Endocrine Society have both issued guidelines for medically transitioning minors. From the beginning, maverick scientists have called foul, pointing out that the safety and long-term effectiveness of such “treatments” had not been evaluated. It seems now that only real-world consequences for actual children can curb the enthusiasm for untested and misguided experimentation on kids. Transgender “medicine” isn’t the only practice advanced as “scientifically proven” despite the absence of evidence. Even earlier, assisted reproductive technologies like in vitro fertilization and surrogacy were pushed on the public with little understanding of or concern for the safety and long-term consequences for women and children. Like transgender medicine, the line is that the “science says the kids will be fine.” Don’t buy it. Recently, the Heritage Foundation’s Emma Waters reviewed the available evidence about some of these technologies. “Despite what many experts want you to believe,” she writes, “we actually know very little about the impact of surrogacy on the long-term wellbeing of children and families.” As it turns out, babies gestated by a surrogate show a marked increase in preterm births, physical defects, and low weight. This is just what we know for certain, partly because we’ve been kept in the dark. Pope Francis was recently crystal clear on this one, despite his confusing and misleading statements on other serious issues. In a recent speech to diplomats, he blasted surrogacy as “deplorable,” insisting it “represents a grave violation of the dignity of the woman and the child,” whom it turns into “an object of trafficking.” “A child,” he added, “is always a gift and never the basis of a commercial contract.”

One feature of American life for some time now is that women, as a group, tend to fall to the left of men politically. For much of the twentieth century, that gap was relatively minor. Until 1980, in fact, the sexes voted within a few percentage points of each other. Since then, things have changed dramatically. Citing polling data from Gallup, Brad Wilcox of the Institute for Family Studies recently pointed out that the percentage of young men ages 18 to 29 who identify as Republican has risen by double digits in the last decade. “Some have doubted the idea that young men (18-29) are turning right,” he tweeted. “Time for them to wake up.” As late as the mid-2000s, a similar portion of 18- to 29-year-olds of both sexes—just under 30%—identified as “liberal.” However, according to an American Enterprise Institute survey last year, 46% of white Gen Z women called themselves “liberal.” Some conservative scholars like the Acton Institute’s Anthony Bradley think this emerging divide extends beyond political commitments to other areas as well, including morality. Last week, he tweeted: Gen Z is different. Women are more liberal than the men and this includes personal morality as well. More and more guys are willing to wait until marriage & fewer women are. Women now celebrate having a “high body count” [a.k.a., many sexual partners] as a[n] empowerment. Today’s young men are more traditional. Still, pollsters have noted for decades now one thing that reliably predicts conservative views and voting, especially among women: marriage. Pick pretty much any election in any year, and half or even most married women vote differently than their unmarried counterparts. In the 2020 election, for instance, the gap between how married and unmarried women voted was 15 points, compared with a 10-point gap between married and unmarried men. As we know, marriage has been in steep decline for years. In fact, Pew Research reports that the share of 40-year-olds who have never been married is higher today than at any time on record. Fertility, too, is near a record low, making our country more single and more childless than at any other time in its history. It would be foolish to think these numbers would not eventually show up in political behavior, and that one of the most likely proofs would be the widening gap between the voting habits of men and women.

Government/Politics/Election Reform	1/25/24	7:56pm	5 minutes	Breakpoint

According to a recent article in the Los Angeles Times, a record 4.2 billion people could vote in elections around the world this year. Ballots will be cast on every continent except Antarctica, and that’s only because penguins can’t vote. To be sure, too many of these elections will not be free, fair, or secure. And, in too many places, an election could only escalate political tensions and further the loss of freedoms. A couple weeks ago, voters in Taiwan elected a new president from the Democratic Progressive Party, increasing tensions between the independence-minded Taiwanese and the Chinese Communist Party. India’s incumbent prime minister, a Hindu nationalist, is expected to easily win a third term this spring, which likely means persecution against Christians and Muslims will intensify there. The election in Bangladesh earlier this month is widely believed to have been a sham, and the upcoming election in Russia will likely have even less credibility. Some view these failures as proof that democracy doesn’t work. The very fact that so much of the global community recognizes corruption and unfair elections as “ugliness” is itself a testament to the power and durability of democratic ideas. The world wasn’t always like this. The idea that humans had inherent dignity and were therefore equal to one another is a uniquely Christian idea, de Tocqueville argued, and fundamentally unlike the utilitarian philosophies that gave rise to the so-called “democracies” of ancient Greece: “It was necessary that Jesus Christ come to earth to make it understood that all members of the human species are naturally alike and equal.”

Sascha Bailey, son of a world-renowned photographer father and a fashion model mother, appeared to “have it all.” Instead, facing suicidal thoughts, recurring depression, and a difficult marriage, he became convinced that he was a woman. All would be better, internet chatrooms assured, if he would transition to a woman. “Sascha’s vision,” explained a recent article from The Daily Mail, “was to become ‘like a real-life Barbie’, with pneumatic curves and long blonde hair.” Today, Bailey regrets this flirtation with disaster. Though he still (wrongly) thinks some people may be born in the wrong body, he is now calling out the transgender industry for its false promises and the wider society for pressuring people into confusion. [I]t’s almost like society has a gun to its head because if they’re not supportive of it, the only choice is to be cancelled. You are either for it, or you’re transphobic; there is no middle ground. He then continued, I feel there’s a huge problem with over-diagnosis of gender dysphoria. ... I think there are a lot of people who, like me, aren’t actually trans, they’re just incredibly unhappy and transitioning is a way of making themselves into a new person, which they believe will fix everything. He also noted the hypocrisy of those who claim to stand against gender stereotypes while also celebrating the shallow transgender imitations of feminine traits. Rather than saving his life, Bailey now believes that his attempts to adopt a new sex was, in reality, suicide with extra steps: “Transitioning was a way of killing myself without dying, because I was so unhappy with my life.”

A common claim by those who advocate for so-called “gender-affirming care” is that the effects of the treatments, especially puberty blockers, are reversible. These drugs are simply a way, advocates claim, for gender-confused teens to “push pause” on puberty and buy more time to find out who they are. At any time, teens can stop taking the drugs and resume puberty without consequences. One group that has long made this claim is the World Professional Association for Transgender Health (WPATH), the leading transgender medical organization. In its Standards of Care, which have become the definitive protocol for “gender-affirming care,” WPATH claims that puberty-blocking drugs, which are supposed to reduce “distress stemming from physical changes that occur when ... puberty begins,” are “fully reversible.” However, in a video recently leaked from WPATH’s September 2022 certification seminar, the truth comes out. According to WPATH-certified pediatric endocrinologist Dr. Daniel Metzger, puberty-blocking drugs aren’t as reversible or noninvasive as advocates claim. In fact, they interrupt teens’ physical development in ways that cannot be reversed.

In the wake of Dobbs, pro-abortion activists are lobbying states to expand access to chemical abortion. As of 2020, chemical abortions made up nearly 54% of all abortions in the United States. Often referred to as “the abortion pill,” the chemical abortion process is actually two pills. The first is intended to end the life of the preborn child. The second is intended to expel it. Drs. George Delgado and Matthew Harrison developed “abortion pill reversal” (APR) for mothers who, after taking the first pill in the chemical abortion regimen, change their minds. Pro-abortion groups generally claim that APR is ineffective and unsafe, an assertion often repeated across media outlets. Chemical abortion involves two pills, Mifepristone and Misoprostol. Mifepristone blocks the hormone progesterone that ensures the flow of essential nutrients to the baby. Without it, the baby will starve and die. One to two days after taking Mifepristone, the mom then takes Misoprostol, which brings on contractions to expel the dead baby from the womb. The chemical abortion process can be reversed before Misoprostol is taken, thanks to a commonly understood chemical process called Reversible Competitive Inhibition. Mifepristone is an “inhibitor.” It blocks progesterone from being able to do its job. If the mom is given natural progesterone within 72 hours of taking Mifepristone, the resulting increase in progesterone can overcome (or “outcompete”) the blockade, restoring to the preborn baby the vital nutrients he or she needs. APR is safe because “natural progesterone has been used safely in early pregnancy for decades.” Studies performed by pro-abortion researchers show that APR is effective and safe. The abortion pill reversal has already saved more than 4,500 lives.

Over the past decade, the idea that a person can be born in the wrong body has caused significant harm to many, most of all young people and their families. Now we are learning just how much this idea, whether caught online, in school, or at a counselor's office, has preyed on the most vulnerable populations. In a recent Breakpoint Forum presentation, Dr. Steve Grcevich described how a growing body of research demonstrates that "the disability community has been disproportionately impacted by the gender revolution." For example, according to a report by the Human Rights Campaign, perhaps the most aggressive promoter of gender ideology and so-called "gender transitions," adults who identify as transgender are overrepresented in almost every category of disability. Not only are adults who identify as transgender more than twice as likely to have a disability than those who don't claim to be LGBTQ, they are almost 20% more likely to have a disability than adults claiming to be LGB or Q. Another study on the prevalence of neurodevelopmental conditions in adults who identify as transgender confirmed that, compared to the general population, adults with OCD, autism, or bipolar disorder were over five times more likely to identify as transgender. Those with ADHD were six to seven times more likely to identify as transgender. Those with depression or learning disorders were over three times more likely to claim a transgender identity. And, shockingly, those with schizophrenia were over 28 times more likely to identify as transgender. Young people who identify as transgender have also exhibited similarly high rates of cognitive ailments. According to one study, almost 70% of youth identifying as transgender had clinically significant anxiety. Over 55% reported clinically significant depression or self-harm, and 46% met screening criteria for PTSD.

Marriage/Family/Homosexuality/ Same-Sex Marriage	2/7/24	7:56pm	5 minutes	Breakpoint

Back in 2004, a collection of voices warned of the consequences of normalizing homosexuality. They were often mocked and dismissed for predicting how so-called “gay marriage” would usher in all kinds of other perversions. Last month, after three national news publications ran stories praising polyamory, these critics now seem like prophets, though their predictions should’ve seemed obvious to all. The slope really was slippery, after all. In The New York Times version, “[A] Polyamorous Mom Had ‘a Big Sexual Adventure’ and Found Herself.” The New York Magazine sported a cover photo of four cute, snuggling cats beneath the headline, “Polyamory: A Practical Guide for the Curious Couple.” The USA Today gave readers a crash course in the supposedly “misunderstood” polyamorous subculture known as “swingers.” For the blessedly uninitiated, polyamory is the practice of having more than one sexual partner. In other words, it is what was called (until yesterday) “promiscuity.” However, as with each prior stop on the slippery slope of undefining marriage and the family, this one also abounds with creative euphemisms like “open relationships,” “non-monogamy,” “throuples,” “swingers,” and (worst of all) “polycules.” The New York Times article listed a bevy of new TV shows, movies, and books promoting polyamory as fun and even beneficial—a journey of “self-discovery” that could liven up your “marriage” (whatever that word still means in this context). Fawning over the middle-aged mom who published her polyamory exploits in a memoir, The Times explained that by opening her marriage, she “cast off internalized sexism and her tendency to put others’ needs before her own.” That last part is certainly true. It’s hard to think of anything more selfish than the implied “you’re not enough” at the heart of polyamory. The most important thing to know about how we got here is this: Dissolving commitment as essential to sexual relationships is the natural outcome of dissolving complementarity between male and female. If sexual differences are made unimportant to our love lives, so is the number of lovers. Despite the salacious memoirs and the mainstream media’s public relations blitz, polyamory is a soul-crushing disaster for those involved. Ironically for a word that means “many loves,” there’s little lasting love involved when people throw aside commitment to one person to chase their every sexual whim.

Montana Child and Family Services (CFS) has removed a 14-year-old daughter, who goes by the pseudonym “Jennifer,” from the custody of her father and stepmother. Todd and Krista Kolstad refused to affirm Jennifer’s self-professed transgender identity. Like many adolescents, Jennifer struggled with this difficult age, but there were no indications of suicidality or distress over her gender. For example, she had experienced some bullying in school, but her parents transferred her to another district. The trouble with CFS began when the school notified Krista and Todd that Jennifer had expressed suicidal thoughts at school. That same day, CFS showed up at the family’s house and asked to do an inspection. Krista and Todd agreed to the inspection. Afterward, when the family sat down with the case worker, Jennifer claimed to have attempted suicide earlier that day by ingesting toilet bowl cleaner and painkillers. They rushed Jennifer to the emergency room, but, thankfully, all tests indicated that she had, in fact, not ingested any toxic substances and was given a clean bill of health. However, things got worse from there. While admitted at the hospital, Jennifer told nurses that she identified as male and preferred to go by the name “Leo.” Hospital staff called her by this new name, despite the protests of her parents. After two days at the hospital, the Kolstads agreed to have Jennifer spend some time at an in-state residential treatment facility. When they learned that Jennifer would instead be sent to an out-of-state facility, they refused to sign the paperwork to release her. Within minutes, CFS was at the Kolstads’ home with papers notifying them that their daughter was being temporarily removed from their custody. Fast-forward six months later when Jennifer was placed into the custody of her birth mother in Canada, with whom she has never had a relationship. When Todd and Krista publicly protested this series of events, they were placed under a gag order, which they ignored. They appealed to the Montana Supreme Court for the gag order to be released and to be given “supervisory control” of Jennifer’s case. Earlier this week, the court rejected their appeal. Though the Kolstads had demonstrated a commitment to Jennifer’s health, the CFS affidavit cited that the reason for her removal was “Physical Neglect — the Youth was suicidal and needed acute psychiatric care and ... [her parents] refused to sign paperwork for the Youth to receive the care that was recommended by the medical professionals.” A common strategy of “gender-affirming” doctors, therapists, and state workers is to predict suicide if a child is not allowed to transition, citing their own expertise. Often, the power play is accompanied by the coercive saying, “You can either have a living son or a dead daughter.” In fact, the opposite is true. Transitioning does not lead to less suicide. Rather, it leads to more. The best research shows that those who undergo chemical and surgical “transition” are over 19 times more likely to commit suicide than the average person. When it comes to youth, the vast majority—88-98%—of adolescents who are allowed to go through puberty will reconcile with their God-given sex. So-called “transitioning” harms—it does not help—teens struggling with distress over their gender.

Research increasingly shows that our culture is in the midst of a mental health epidemic, especially among children and youth — persistent feelings of sadness & hopelessness, anxiety and even suicidal thoughts. But Danny believes parents can offset these issues by routinely initiating conversations with your children to assess their mental and emotional well-being. Also, establishing a solid spiritual environment in your home will help improve mental health. Danny recommends parents use “feeling charts” and “thought bubbles” to help children see how their thoughts & emotions are connected, and how to choose more healthy/godly perspectives.

God intended sex to be reserved for and exclusive to a marital relationship. On today’s classic edition of Family Talk, we’ll learn why that divine purpose has been disregarded through Dr. James Dobson’s interview with sex therapists, Dr. Clifford and Joyce Penner. They share how pornography and casual sex have warped our view of intimacy. Hebrews 13:4 says, “Marriage should be honored by all, and the marriage bed kept pure, for God will judge the adulterer and all the sexually immoral.”

Recently, The New York Times published an opinion column describing stories of people who, we’ve long been told, don’t exist. According to transgender activists and their allies in media, those who “detransition” are either legends or are so rare that they’re viewed as right-wing pawns and talking points. They have also been described as people with “a lot of internalized transphobia.” At best, they are viewed with suspicion because they complicate the narrative that “gender-affirming care”—a phrase that actually refers to social, chemical, and surgical rejections of biology—will bring peace and contentment with one’s true identity. Because more than a few articles and opinion pieces in The New York Times have been critical of the idea of “detransitioners,” many were surprised at this opinion piece that compassionately told of individuals who detransitioned and highlighted the harms they faced from counselors, psychologists, and medical institutions. Yet, though the piece comes off as a kind of exposé, it’s billed as an opinion piece. It largely repeated points made for years by scholars like Ryan Anderson, Abigail Shrier, and others. The irreversible harms of “gender-affirming care” have been known for some time. For example, we’ve long known that there’s a difference between gender dysphoria—which, historically, affected a very small population of young boys—and the rapid onset gender dysphoria of the last decade that affected skyrocketing rates of teen and pre-teen girls. We’ve known that major pediatric, psychiatric, and psychological associations were so captured by gender ideology that they preempted normal standards of care, rushed children to life-altering treatments, and refused to consider comorbidities like OCD, depression, autism, trauma, sexual abuse, and other physical and mental health issues. Though distinct, transgenderism and homosexuality each reject the role biological sex plays in who we are and how we should live. Transgenderism denies that biological sex defines the true self. Homosexuality rejects that sex defines who one should marry and engage in sexual intimacy with. Gender dysphoria and same-sex attraction are real burdens for some. But healing and wholeness will only be found in embracing, not rejecting, who God made us to be.

Many people casually believe that marriage should be a 50/50 proposition. But we need to be careful that we’re not mistakenly manifesting a performance-based marriage, where a husband and wife are always keeping score. Abortion	2/15/24	7:56pm	5 minutes	Breakpoint

A study published in the European Journal of Human Genetics found that across Europe, births of children with Down syndrome are now about half what we’d expect. Again, this isn’t because of some miracle cure, but because parents are aborting around half—in some countries as many as 83%—of children diagnosed with Down syndrome in the womb. Usually, those on the political Left cheer assisted suicide, euthanasia, and abortion “rights.” Increasingly, the post-Christian Right is leading the applause. Political researcher and commentator Richard Hanania, for instance, shared this study and praised the results: “Many of the parents go on to have a healthy child instead, or maybe two. So you get just as many lives but more health. There are actually people who think this is a bad thing.” In response, David Harsanyi at The Federalist correctly identified this as the same logic behind eugenics, and asked: “If eugenics is a social good, why stop at Down syndrome? Why not keep having abortions until you get the perfect kid?” The logic behind the Western war on the weak is simple and sinister. Thousands of human beings are being told, “You’re imperfect, so you’re better off dead, and everyone else is better off without you.” The United States isn’t far behind. According to estimates, around one-third of children with Down syndrome are aborted in this country, and more states are considering legalizing so-called “Medical Assistance in Dying,” even embracing Canada’s misleading label for it.

Years from now, by God’s grace, the world may look back with horror on the abortion holocaust that engulfed our nation and much of the world. When they do, people will discuss the movement that helped make this injustice unthinkable for civilized people. Part of that conversation will be how the movement recruited champions, especially young people, and equipped them to defend the preborn. One of the sage champions for the unborn has been Scott Klusendorf, who is also the president of Life Training Institute. With tireless effort over decades now, Scott has continued to make the case for life to thousands and thousands. He’s made the issue simple, focused, and clear. His formulation has come to be one of the definitive articulations of what it means to be pro-life. Fifteen years ago, Scott wrote his instrumental pro-life book The Case for Life. At the time, Roe v. Wade legally subverted the conversation about restrictions on abortion. In 2022, the Dobbs decision brought a long-prayed-for end to Roe. However, in the time since that victory, we’ve gotten a much better idea of where the American public is on the question of abortion. Simply put, they might not like it themselves, but they’re squeamish about denying it to others. We must continue to make the case for life. In response to the unfortunate revelations of the last few years, Scott has released a comprehensively revised and expanded edition of The Case for Life. This second edition features eight new chapters and a thorough revision of ten others. In his expanded version, Klusendorf masterfully informs and equips us to respond to the latest pro-abortion arguments. Often, so-called “experts” get away with misinformation and false representations. But Klusendorf takes the strongest pro-abortion thinkers and pro-abortion arguments head-on: for instance, the young law lecturer at Oxford who claims that while the preborn are human, they are not persons. Klusendorf points out that these distinctions based on consciousness and sentience are arbitrary and open to abuse. He also clarifies five key objectives of every effective pro-life advocate, which make up the five sections of the book. First, we must clarify the debate by showing what the abortion debate is ultimately about. Second, we must highlight underlying worldview questions and assumptions that underpin the arguments for and against abortion. Third, anyone wanting to be effective must identify, understand, and respond to leading pro-abortion voices and their views on conception, personhood, and rights. Fourth, pro-lifers must persuasively answer objections to pro-life arguments, including women’s safety, religious tolerance, and cases of rape. Finally, we must be committed to teaching, equipping, and collaborating with other pro-lifers.

Last year, the population of the nation of China dropped by at least two million people. That number is over double the nation’s population decline in 2022. For context, this is like the U.S. losing the entire population of the state of Nebraska or the city of Houston, Texas in a single year. What continues to drive China’s drastic decline in population is a drop in births. In the last five years, the number of births there has dropped by almost half, according to China’s National Bureau of Statistics. In 2017, China reported 17 million births. In 2023, it reported only 9 million, a number that fails to replace the 11 million people who died. In 2016, China revoked its infamous one-child policy. In recent years, local governments and corporations have made concentrated efforts to encourage and even incentivize citizens to have more kids. In Hangzhou, the local government offered $2,800 for those who had a third child in 2023. In Wenzhou, parents were offered over $400 for every child they have. Some companies are offering cash bonuses for the first five years of a child’s life. Yet, despite these efforts, China’s population continues to decline. To be clear, though its situation may be the most dramatic, China is not the only country facing population decline. Countries across the developed world, from Europe to East Asia, have birth rates well below the replacement rate. And, like China, several of them are attempting to incentivize citizens to have more children. Behind the developed world’s fertility struggles is a cultural shift in views, not only about children and parenting, but more fundamentally, about marriage and sex. As one Chinese official observed about the 2022 decline, citizens have lost a “willingness to have babies” and are delaying “marriage and pregnancy.” For starters, marriage is no longer viewed as a “foundation” upon which people can build lives and livelihoods. Increasingly, it is viewed as a kind of “capstone” that adorns young adulthood, coming after one has gone to college, achieved economic independence, and made a successful start in one’s career. Additionally, thanks to reproductive technologies like the pill, in vitro fertilization, and surrogacy, the severing of reproduction from the act of sex is nearly complete and, with it, a further disconnect between sex and its God-given purpose. It is now something of a cultural given to presume that sex exists primarily for one’s personal pleasure rather than for the conception of children.

On today's edition of Family Talk, Pastor Ted Cunningham, comedian on the "Date Night Comedy Tour," insists that you haven't started marriage until you end up with your parents' broken-in, worn-out mattress. Since the dip is already built in, you'll both roll to the center! On a serious note, Cunningham wisely counsels spouses to plug into God as their source of life instead of relying on their husband or wife to provide happiness and purpose. Prepare to laugh out loud as you learn biblical insight that can draw you closer to God, and then your spouse, and your family.

In a rare moment of bipartisanship, senators on both sides of the aisle have agreed that social media is not safe for teens, and that it’s time for the government to do something about it. Public concern about social media’s ill effects, especially on the mental health of teenagers, has been growing for years. In 2018, sociologist Jean Twenge exposed that teens’ mental health has been in steep decline since 2012, the first year that the majority of Americans owned smartphones. In 2021, a series of articles in The Wall Street Journal exposed that Instagram fueled body image issues and suicidal ideation and that Facebook, despite knowing this, failed to do anything about it. That same year, a Congressional hearing featuring Facebook whistleblower Francis Haugen focused on these harms. In another congressional hearing last week called “Big Tech and the Child Sexual Exploitation Crisis,” lawmakers pulled no punches. “You have blood on your hands,” Senator Lindsay Graham (R-SC) said to the social media CEOs present at the hearing. And, at a post-hearing event at the Heritage Foundation, Senator Marsha Blackburn (R-TN) observed:

For years, big tech companies have made empty promises about how they are going to address this rampant abuse, this malicious content, and the criminal activity that is on their platforms. What we have found out is, Big Tech is incapable of policing themselves. They’re incapable of putting together best practices, and they’re incapable of implementing that. They would rather go make money. Various members of the senate judiciary committee have introduced a number of bipartisan bills, each aimed at instituting a duty of care for social media companies to prevent and mitigate harms to minors. These bills would allow users to opt out of platforms’ algorithms and would require mandatory third-party annual audits to ensure that the platforms are carrying out these duties.

In sci-fi and horror movies, the “mad scientist” rarely begins as a villain. From Dr. Frankenstein to Spiderman’s Doc Ock, they are often the victims of a combination of good intentions, unstoppable curiosity, and more than a little hubris. Their plight is as familiar in real life as on screen, most recently with artificial intelligence. Ray Kurzweil is a scientist and futurist who for years now has predicted potential advancements in higher tech, as not just a helpful set of tools for humans to use but also as essential to post-human evolution. By hitching our humanity to artificial intelligence, what he calls “the Singularity,” Kurzweil prophesies a new age: And this Singularity isn’t far off. I set the date for the Singularity—representing a profound and disruptive transformation in human capability—as 2045. The nonbiological intelligence created in that year will be one billion times more powerful than all human intelligence today. Kurzweil sees the Singularity as more than a possibility. He thinks it is a near-absolute inevitability that human intelligence will be equaled, surpassed, and eventually merged with our computerized tools. Though many predictions about AI are still more science-fiction than fact, it is advancing faster than many expected. For years, Oxford mathematician and devout Christian John Lennox has warned of some of AI’s more negative implications. In his book 2084: Artificial Intelligence and the Future of Humanity, Lennox challenged more utopian predictions about AI and highlighted its limits. “A neural network,” wrote Lennox, “can pick out a cat on a YouTube video, but it has no concept of what a cat is.” Here, Lennox is pointing to a profound limitation of materialism. In fact, only those wedded to the idea that the human mind is merely an organic machine can think that a smart computer is, in any real sense, “alive.” However, potentials are not actuals, and history is full of the unintended applications and consequences of human technologies. The only way forward in these possible futures is with a clear-eyed perspective on human exceptionalism and human fallenness. We must know the implications of both being created in the image of God and being an heir of Adam’s sin.

Fewer people today are raising children. The verb “raise” is apt, despite the longstanding insistence from style guides that the correct verb is to “rear.” If the number of children born each year does not equal or exceed the number of people who die, the population will age and shrink. This is the current situation across the developed world. A major factor behind this predicament is that we’ve largely forgotten how to speak of shared responsibility today. Our choices, especially when it comes to sexuality and relationships, are seen in hyper-individualistic terms. We hardly ask how my choices will affect my neighbors, born and unborn, or society in the decades to come. Instead, we ask will this choice fulfill me? Will it make me happy? Will it serve my goals and dreams as an individual? Increasingly, marriage and childbearing are evaluated through this individualist lens. The conclusion is that a family will not fulfill them, nor make them happy, nor serve their goals and dreams as individuals. In a recent article for Law and Liberty, Elizabeth Grace Matthew argued that secular writers have missed something in their cost-benefit analysis. Children, she argued, have value that transcends individual goals and dreams. They aren’t mere accessories of our self-expression. They are gifts to society who represent “a disposition of generosity toward God and His world.” Children challenge the secular, hyper-individualist worldview to its core. They present an immediate, shared responsibility that directs us beyond material gain and personal fulfillment to higher ideals. Simply put, more people must and should marry and have children if society is to survive.

A decision by the Supreme Court of Alabama, that the state’s Wrongful Death of a Minor Act applies to “all unborn children, regardless of their location” including “extrauterine” embryos stored in a “cryogenic nursery,” has resulted in at least three fertility clinics suspending in vitro fertilization (IVF) services. In an interview on The Daily podcast, New York Times reporter Azeen Ghorayshi claimed that the decision “puts all fertility care in Alabama in limbo.” It sets a huge and quite scary precedent for anyone who is undergoing IVF, anyone who works in the fertility industry in Alabama who is working with these embryos that are suddenly considered children. That panic, which has been typical of the media coverage about the decision, makes sense given that the court finally addressed the central question of IVF, a question that the IVF industry has largely depended upon not being answered in order to grow and expand. Specifically, the court’s decision has only put a certain kind of fertility care “in limbo”: fertility care that involves the creating, storing, preserving, and destroying of human embryos. Asking the question “what are they?” was long overdue, given that approximately 1.5 million embryos left over from IVF services are currently stored in freezers in the United States, the vast majority of which are destined for either destruction or donation for medical testing. Their ruling creates (or reveals?) a legal contradiction similar to that which exists in states with both abortion “rights” and double homicide laws. If a pregnant woman and her preborn baby are killed, the perpetrator can be charged with two counts of homicide. Yet, if that same woman escaped an assault and drove to an abortion clinic the same day, there would be no charge of homicide, legally speaking. In the Alabama case, the court established that the moral nature of an embryo gives it the same legal protections as a born human under the state’s “wrongful death” statute. Why, then, should the same embryos not be afforded protection from imprisonment, trafficking, experimentation, and eventual destruction? So, while this decision can be rightly seen as an incremental step toward the protection of preborn lives created via IVF, the embryos in this case were already being treated in precisely the way the plaintiffs accused others. Eventually, this legal inconsistency must be rectified. The best outcome is if this decision is a first step in reigning in the IVF process, so that one day “extrauterine” children will no longer be treated as commodities.

Monica Swanson wants to remind parents that it’s possible to “raise amazing” kids IF you rely on God’s strength instead of your own. And you need to be intentional about instilling godly character traits into their lives. Monica refers to “parentamorphosis” — the reality that our children will ultimately become a lot like us, so modeling our values and faith daily is important. She also encourages parents to be mindful of the influences of friends — that we’re all the average of 5 people who influence us the most. Moms and dads cannot simply focus on behavioral modification but also need to focus more on a child’s heart. The closing arguments will take place today in the disqualification trial for Fulton County District Attorney Fani Willis. Will DA Willis’ improper relationship with Special Prosecutor Nathan Wade disqualify her from pursuing the case against President Donald Trump for 2020 election interference? Will the new evidence of the cellphone records for Willis and Wade open them up to a perjury charge? Also, the New York Times found text messages by Terrence Bradley that show he willingly helped Trump’s defense attorneys, which contradicts his testimony on the witness stand. The Sekulow team discusses the judge’s forthcoming decision in Georgia, an update on the ACLJ’s FBI whistleblower case, and the ongoing ACLJ case at the U.S. Supreme Court to preserve voting rights.

In a recent interview with Shane Morris on the Colson Center’s Upstream podcast, pro-life apologist Scott Klusendorf said something difficult out loud:
Every time this has been put to the public for a vote since the casting down of Roe, we have lost. And we’ve lost not only in blue states like Michigan. We have lost in red states like Ohio, Montana, Kentucky. And these are indicators that there’s something not right in the worldview structures that we had assumed all along were in our favor, and they’re not. And that changes what our job description looks like post-Roe.

According to Klusendorf, the problem isn’t that most Americans have heard the case for life and rejected it. Rather, they’ve simply never heard the case clearly articulated and been forced to reckon with it. Now that the Supreme Court has put this issue of abortion back to the states, it is more urgent than ever that we are able to argue persuasively for the rights of the unborn at the street level, or as Chuck Colson used to say, “Over the backyard fence around the barbeque grill.” Apparently, Americans are either unconvinced about or distracted from the most important question in the abortion debate: Who are the preborn? Fifteen years ago, Klusendorf wrote The Case for Life, a book that answered that question and has been invaluable to pro-lifers in simplifying the argument for all of us. Now that the depth of pro-abortion assumptions in our culture has become obvious, he’s updated and massively expanded The Case for Life. It’s a must-read for anyone who wants to defend preborn lives.

Government/Politics/Border Security Immigration	3/2/24	7pm – Sat.	30 minutes	National Crawford Roundtable

On this week's National Crawford Roundtable they discuss Laken Riley's murder, the 22 year-old Georgia nursing student. Laken and her parents are a Christian family, active members of their church, and describe her "love for the Lord." She was brutally murdered by Jose Antonio Ibarra, an illegal alien caught and released by the Biden Administration, arrested and released 3 times before committing this murder. AP report on this murder omitted that he was a released illegal alien, but merely an "Athens (Georgia) resident", then proceeded to make the story about the dangers of "jogging alone." In 3 years, Biden's own numbers show 7.2 million illegals caught & released, plus 1.8 million "known getaways" = 9 million. Add to that at least 1 million unknown illegals, and that's 10 million illegals in 3 years, a number larger than the entire population of NYC, or of 38 states. Trump says this is an "invasion," and vowed "the largest deportation effort in U.S. history" if elected. The true human cost of Biden's open borders....all for the sake of more Democrat U.S. House seats and Electoral College votes.

Several years ago, 16-year-old Yaeli Martinez was removed from her home by the state of California after her mother wouldn't affirm that she was a boy. Struggling with depression and mental illness, Yaeli was encouraged by the state to socially transition and receive testosterone. Her mother was forbidden to talk about faith or her daughter's gender confusion when visiting her. Despite the state's "affirmation," Yaeli tragically ended her own life at age 19. Lest we are tempted to think this kind of state overreach into families is limited to the Left Coast, a 14-year-old Montana girl was recently removed from her home on charges of neglect. When the parents defied the courts and publicly spoke out, they were charged with contempt. Though the state dropped the charge, the child has been relocated to her non-custodial parent in Canada. And the other week, a story broke about a situation in Indiana, which is just now reaching the public's attention due to the child's age and because the parents are asking the United States Supreme Court to hold state officials accountable. In 2019, the son of Mary and Jeremy Cox announced he was a girl. As loving Christian parents, they worked to get him the therapy he needed to deal with any underlying, contributing issues, including an eating disorder, without affirming his gender dysphoria. State officials, after learning that the Coxes would not use their son's "preferred pronouns," removed him from their care. Even more galling is that the Indiana Department of Child Services initially claimed that the parents had not sought treatment for the eating disorder and were guilty of neglect and abuse. Despite these accusations, the government did not think it necessary to remove the other children. Eventually, the state admitted the allegations were false. However, the damage was done, and their child was not returned. Mr. and Mrs. Cox have been forced to take their state to court. So far, the Indiana Appeals Court and the Indiana Supreme Court have rejected their appeals. Now, they are waiting to learn if the U.S. Supreme Court will hear their case.

Last month, in the Journal of American Medicine, the medical director of Planned Parenthood Montana claimed that 64,565 babies had likely been conceived in rape in the 14 states where abortion is restricted since the Supreme Court’s Dobbs decision. The claim was put forth as the results of a formal study, though the authors admit that “no reliable state-level data ... are available,” and their numbers were “estimated.” Unsurprisingly, media outlets quickly reported on the study as if it were evidence of a national emergency ... a particular kind of national emergency. Without exception, every major news outlet framed this story as not about rampant sexual crime, but about abortion access. For example, CNN announced: “Tens of thousands of pregnancies have resulted from rape in states where abortion is not a legal option, researchers estimate.” Theirs is a disturbing angle to take on this story, if the numbers are accurate. The authors of the study estimated that 12.4% of rapes result in pregnancy. If accurate, that means around 520,000 women were raped in just 14 states over a period of just 18 months. That is almost five times the number the FBI estimated for the entire nation during 2022, a number that appeared to be trending downward from 2021. More troubling, however, is how exaggerated these numbers are. Michael New, a senior associate scholar at the Charlotte Lozier Institute, called the study “one of the worst and most misleading pieces of advocacy research that I have ever encountered.” In addition to suggesting that an astronomical number of rapes occurred in certain states, the piece used inflated estimates of rape-related pregnancies. Other medical research suggests that pregnancy occurs after only about 5% of rapes, not 12.4%. It’s far more likely that if there is a line from legal abortion to rape, it runs in a different direction. Fifty years of legal abortion-on-demand has been among the most significant factors that have enabled the myth that sex is a casual, physical act with no moral, spiritual, or emotional implications. Roe enabled both men and women, but especially men, to abdicate personal responsibility for any children they create. Also, the normalization of so-called “casual sex” made forced sex harder to define and easier to deny. Abortion-on-demand doesn’t help victims of rape. Rather, it emboldens and enables perpetrators.

On March 8, International Women’s Day, a referendum will be held on whether to erase the word “mother” from the Irish constitution. As originally written, the Irish constitution included provisions to protect traditional roles for women, particularly their role within the home. Now, some think that to better reflect current sensibilities, the constitution should read “the provision of care, by members of a family to one another by reason of the bonds that exist among them.” No reference to mothers or to women. The change might seem small, but it would put Ireland in the position of attempting to be the first nation in history to eliminate from its governing language words that describe objective realities about people. After all, “people” are, in reality, a boy, a girl, a man, a woman, a husband, a wife, a mother, or a father. To either redefine or eliminate this linguistic precision makes no real sense, outside of an imposition of radical gender ideology that seeks to eliminate certain ideas by eliminating words while also implementing other ideas through new words. On the chopping block in this referendum is not only the support for stay-at-home moms and the recognition of the role of women as caregivers, but also the natural family itself. Another proposed change is to remove reference to marriage as the foundation of the family and the family as the foundation of society. This would enable another change proposed for an earlier section, to state that family is founded either “on marriage or on other durable relationships” (emphasis added). To be clear, these changes are as ideological as they are linguistic, an inevitable part of an ongoing frontal assault upon Ireland’s historical Christian foundations. They track with larger trends sweeping through the Western world. Historically, some of these changes go back as far as the Industrial Revolution, when factories replaced households as the fundamental unit of production, and husbands and wives left their homes to work in factories. Unfortunately, these intentions have proven to be insufficient. Economic pressures and elevated financial expectations have made two-income households the norm in the Western world. Radical strains of feminism and other related ideologies constantly deny the differences between men and women in the workforce and in family life, while constantly portraying traditional family life as oppressive to women.

Earlier this week, internal files leaked from the World Professional Association of Transgender Health (WPATH), the leading medical association pushing for the chemical and surgical “gender transition” of minors, were made public by journalist and thought leader Michael Shellenberger. For years, clinical, political, and pop culture activists have cited WPATH to claim that the science is “settled” on “gender-affirming care,” and that social, chemical, and surgical “transition” interventions are safe, reversible, and life-saving. WPATH leaders even claimed that young children and minors with autism can meaningfully consent to such “care.” The leaked “WPATH Files,” however, reveal a different, more damning story. Far from being settled science, “transitioning” can lead to painful complications, regret, and even life-threatening conditions such as cancer, especially for vulnerable populations. Even more, the leaked files revealed that WPATH personnel knew this and yet continued to actively mislead patients and the public.

H.L. Mencken famously defined Puritanism as “[t]he haunting fear that someone, somewhere, may be happy.” However, judging by the mental and emotional condition of the children of secularism, it is not Christianity—Puritan or otherwise—that is making people unhappy. Never have so few Americans identified as Christians and attended church, yet many are quick to blame Christianity and its moral demands for the decline in joy. After all, the story goes, Christians are spoilsports, biblical morality deprives people of freedom and self-expression, and much of the Church’s teaching is harmful or even abusive. In contrast, secularism, with its so-called sexual “liberation,” is sold with the promise of allowing people to be free and happy. Secular thinkers vowed to bring about human progress and flourishing. The twentieth century, however, proved that these thinkers could not deliver the goods. Their promises of civilizational progress, at least, had failed. In response, postmodern thinkers like Foucault and Derrida announced the death of secularism’s utopian dreams but held out hope that sexual liberation would, at least, make people happy. If the first couple decades of the twenty-first century are any indications, these promises were hollow, too. Last year, a Gallup poll found that just 41% of Generation Z feel as if they are thriving, compared with 60% of Millennials at the same age. Also, members of Gen Z are “far less likely to describe their mental health as ‘excellent’” than previous generations. Their struggle is not solely, or even primarily, about circumstances like economics. Rather, theirs is a deep-seated emotional, psychological, and spiritual brokenness. Of course, there are other factors besides religious belief or the lack thereof that affect wellbeing. The rise of smartphones and social media has contributed to the erosion of happiness and mental health in the last decade. However, it should be noted that these are mediums for some of secularism’s most destructive ideas: hyper-individualism, gender identity, and pornography-inspired body image issues and sexual dysfunction, to name a few.

Education	3/18/24	7:56pm	5 minutes	Breakpoint

According to a recent article in the Washington Post, some 65% of “teachers said that they limited their instruction because they were afraid of upsetting parents ... and felt uncertain about whether their school or district leaders would support them if parents expressed concerns.” To varying degrees, teachers in more progressive and in more right-leaning areas admitted as much. Though, according to the author, teachers were more likely to suppress classroom content in areas where former President Trump received the majority vote in 2020. The encouraging part of this story is that more teachers care how parents will respond to what their children are being taught. This is certainly an improvement over treating children as if they are the property of the state or the school. For too long and for too many, parental involvement has been limited and even discouraged, left up to “experts” to determine what is and is not appropriate content for kids. Beyond the parent/teacher dynamic, there is another, troubling side to this story. Regardless of political leanings, when the place of truth within education is unclear and uncertain, and the role of the teacher as a representative of truth is compromised, the educational project has lost its way. The clear implication for learners and teachers is that truth is merely subjective and should be changed to fit the mood of the day. In fact, according to the ever-increasing Critical Theory mood dominating education in the Western world, any claim to objective truth is viewed as an oppressive power play rather than an accurate reflection of reality. It’s inevitable that teachers will instruct their students according to the worldviews dominating the educational system. So, it shouldn’t surprise us when teachers alter content to better fit the cultural mood, especially if it means escaping the backlash of a polarized age. But, this isn’t education. At best, it’s confusion. At worst, it’s propaganda. There is a surge in enrollment in Christian education over the past few years is an encouraging sign. In fact, both parents and educators have moved en masse from state-run options to private, Christian ones, a move that seems to point to a shifting mood about education itself.

As the old saying goes, “to a hammer, everything looks like a nail.” Among the hammers today is psychotherapy, and too many wielding it are convinced that every human problem is a nail. However, the unprecedented rise of mental health problems in Generation Z suggests that the overuse of this tool has done as much harm as good. In a bold new book, Abigail Shrier confronts the idea of psychology as an all-consuming ideology. In Bad Therapy: Why the Kids Aren’t Growing Up, Shrier argues that much of what is now taken for granted about psychological and emotional “trauma” is wrong and has left millions of young adults more “traumatized” than if they’d had no therapy at all. This thesis aligns with that of her previous book Irreversible Damage, which exposed the reckless push to medically transition gender-dysphoric kids, especially girls. This push has been driven by the mental health industry. In Bad Therapy, Shrier points out the many indications that the whole approach of our therapy-obsessed age is awry. Most obvious is that despite living in one of the most objectively prosperous and safe times in human history, our young people are, en masse, mentally sicker and emotionally sadder than ever. In fact, over 40% of young adults have a mental health diagnosis, twice the rate of the general population. So, the generation most treated for psychological wellbeing is doing the worst psychologically. For Christians who understand that human beings are more than matter that can be molded and medicated, the need for a book like this is even more obvious. Divine revelation and millennia of insight suggest that much of what passes for “psychological trauma” today is spiritual brokenness. Spiritual healing can take the form of counseling and medication, but to put it simply, no amount of psychotherapy alleviates our need for a Savior.

Same-Sex Marriage/Homosexuality	3/21/24	7:56pm	5 minutes	Breakpoint

According to recent Gallup polls, 71% of Americans think same-sex “marriage” should be legal, and 64% believe gay or lesbian relationships are morally acceptable. These numbers are double from a generation ago. Among those who attend church weekly, 41% support same-sex “marriage,” while 67% of those who attend church less frequently do. How is it that so many, including so many in the Church, now embrace a view of marriage that was unthinkable just a few decades ago? Long before the Supreme Court decision in Obergefell v. Hodges, the case that legalized same-sex unions as “marriages,” the meaning of marriage was already fraying. This was due to a host of cultural factors, but perhaps none more important than birth control. The invention and widespread acceptance of “the pill” in the 20th century finally severed what was long understood to be a package deal: marriage, sex, and children. The only way for sex to be morally severed from marriage was for it to be detached from the good and natural consequence of new life. As a result, extramarital sex was destigmatized, and even more, sexual pleasure and romance replaced commitment and children as the defining features of marriage. Hollywood helped, too. The definitive sitcoms of the 1980s focused on the family. In the 90’s, shows like Sex and the City and Friends portrayed an idealized, hyper-sexual, hyper-romantic, commitment-free world. Movies and shows initiated viewers into what Dr. Thaddeus Williams has called the “cult of self,” where “following your heart” is the highest goal in life. In a culture drunk on these ideals, the silly and observably false slogan of the gay rights movement, “love is love,” made perfect sense. Law is also a teacher. When something is legal, it becomes more socially acceptable. The Supreme Court’s ruling in Obergefell not only reflected cultural beliefs, but it also spread them. This explains the increasing acceptance of homosexuality and same-sex “marriage,” both within the Church and without. Though a majority of those who attend church faithfully still hold to the Christian view of marriage between one man and one woman, it is a shrinking majority.

Abortion	3/22/24	1pm	30 minutes	Family Talk

In 1973, the landmark case Roe v. Wade legalized abortion in America. Then in 2022, we saw the reversal of that evil law, leaving each state to decide independently the legalities surrounding abortion. Today on Family Talk, Michele Bachmann continues her riveting discussion with Allan Parker, Jr., about how God called him to represent the two women whose cases resulted in abortion in America.

Abortion/Government/Politics	3/22/24	7:56pm	5 minutes	Breakpoint

Last week, Kamala Harris became the first vice president in U.S. history to make a public visit to an abortion clinic. Though the Democratic party’s support for abortion is nothing new, Harris’ Planned Parenthood appearance does illustrate how that support has become a flagrant celebration of abortion as a public and personal good, essential to both “freedom” and to “healthcare.” At the appearance, Harris proclaimed, It is only right and fair that people have access to the health care they need. Extremists have proposed and passed laws that have denied women access to reproductive health care. Contrary to her claim, killing preborn children, whether through chemical or surgical abortion, cannot (at least in any sane reckoning) be considered “health care,” neither for the child nor for the mother. As many have noted, when a woman gets pregnant, it is not because something has gone wrong with her body. In fact, abortion is not safe for women. The chances of complications are high and can even be life threatening, and women are four times more likely to experience complications from chemical abortion than surgical abortion. For the child, of course, abortion ends a life that is developing. In the case of chemical abortion, the child is starved of nutrients. In the case of surgical abortion, the child’s life is ended, and the body is dismembered. Neither of those things are “health care,” at least not in a world that is morally sane. By calling those who hope to limit abortion “extremists,” Harris maligned and mischaracterized thousands of everyday Americans. For years, most Americans have supported legal limits on abortion. As of 2024, 66% of Americans want to see abortion legally restricted, and nearly six in 10 support limiting abortion to the first trimester. It is the Democratic party that, long ago, became extremists on this issue. In the past, pro-abortion candidates held abortion at arm’s length. Last year, Biden said, “I’m a practicing Catholic. I’m not big on abortion.” This year, Biden has announced that returning Roe v. Wade, which made America an outlier on abortion restriction, is his top priority. Harris’s appearance at Planned Parenthood signaled how serious this administration is. As Politico noted, the Biden-Harris agenda is “the strongest abortion rights platform of any general election candidate.” We could add the word “ever” to that sentence. For the White House incumbents, abortion is no longer a necessary evil. It is a fundamental freedom.

Government/Politics/Immigration/ Election Reform	3/23/24	7pm – Sat.	30 minutes	National Crawford Roundtable

On this week's National Crawford Roundtable they discuss the recent U.S. Supreme Court decision to allow Texas to detain illegal immigrants utilizing Texas state law rather than federal guidelines. Is the Senate Bill 4 too harsh for those seeking to enter the US but doing so illegally? Will Congress act to pass more common sense immigration legislation before 5 November? They also look into a "shocking" claim from Democrat Congresswoman Katie Porter that the Senate race in the California primary was . . . rigged (even though the top 2 spots went to Republican Steve Garvey and Democrat Adam Schiff).

Driving is such a great illustration for life! We encounter people and circumstances that force us to make quick decisions all while trying to protect our family and ourselves. And we have to stay in the right lane to get to where we are headed. On this one-day Focus on the Family broadcast, pastor Kevin Thompson helps you learn how to navigate the roads of life—circumstances, situations relationships—by staying in your lane. By examining what belongs to us, what belongs to others, and what belongs to God, you’ll get a strong grasp on boundaries and how to apply them in your life.

BREAKING: President Donald Trump’s bond amount was reduced by an appeals court – now the former President will only have to post $175 million as bond to appeal his New York civil case. How will New York Attorney General Letitia James respond to this latest news? Also, Instagram is the latest social media platform to engage in social media censorship (limiting “political content”). The Deep State FBI was exposed for colluding with Mark Zuckerberg and Facebook to censor conservatives in 2020, and it looks like the 2024 presidential election between President Donald Trump and President Joe Biden will include more of the same attacks on free speech. The Sekulow team discusses the social media censorship debate, how the ACLJ is fighting against unlawful censorship, NBC’s Chuck Todd slamming network bosses for hiring Ronna McDaniel, U.S. foreign policy regarding Russia – and much more.

Family/Parenting/Pornography	3/25/24	1pm	30 minutes	Family Talk

If men didn't grow up with fathers who validated and loved them, they often turn to women or even porn to find that affirmation. Today on Family Talk, Dr. James Dobson interviews John Eldredge, author of the best-selling book, Wild at Heart. They discuss the "father wound" that can manifest itself in a young boy’s life if he grows up without a strong male figure at home. Learn how Jesus came to heal that hurt in the lives of the brokenhearted as He sets the captives free.

Psalm 46 reminds us to “be still and know God,” a concept easily lost in the constant busyness of our culture. On today’s edition of Family Talk, Dr. James Dobson continues his conversation with John Eldredge about his book, Get Your Life Back: Everyday Practices for a World Gone Mad. John explains the dangers of a distracted, technology-addicted lifestyle, and suggests that we practice the "One Minute Pause,” along with soaking up God’s creation and turning off our phones. As we unplug from the "fight or flight" culture, our stress-triggered cortisol levels go down, and we can begin to learn how to cast our cares upon the Lord.

The evidence that “gender-affirming care” harms young people has been widely available for years. However, it has been widely suppressed by policymakers, medical professionals, and media outlets. That is now changing, largely because the stories of those harmed by these dangerous ideas are being told.

At the most recent Lighthouse Voices event, a series that is co-hosted by Focus on the Family and the Colson Center, Laura Perry Smalts told her story. After eight years of attempting to live as a male, Laura came to faith in Jesus Christ, first as her savior and then as her maker. Her message is a powerful testimony to both the dangerous lies of this movement, especially for young people, and to the potential for reconciling to both God and self.
