Summary	Remember the good old days, when people made condescending or childish comments when they didn't like how the voting went in the Hawaiian music category of the Grammy awards? Remember those great discussions about what truly should be acknowledged, and who should vote, and how ignorant people who don't get it were making decisions? Remember how maligned winners were justifiably stating that they were simply doing their art as they saw fit, and that it was up to others to make decisions on who wins and who doesn't? Well sports fans, those good old days of two months ago and last year and the year before that are gone, as the recording academy has decided to shrink the number of Grammy categories from 109 down to 78. So now, if you are an artist performing any sort of Hawaiian music, you will be relegated to compete against Zydeco, Cajun, Native American, and even polka music in the catch-all category of "regional roots music".

Foster who's a consumer advocate responded to an unsolicited email asking him to be a "mystery shopper". Legitimate research companies use these undercover shoppers to document customer service at various businesses, but scam artists have created sophisticated schemes promising potential "mystery shoppers" big money. The internet has setup all sorts of unscrupulous schemes and has tricked people during the bad economy. Angela Callahan was one of the people that fell victim to and internet scheme. Like Foster, she received a check in the mail for more than $3,000 with a letter instructing her to deposit it at her own bank. She was then told to go to Western Union and observe its customer service while transferring money from her bank account.

Summary	There's talk about major renovations in Haleiwa town. Landowner Kamehameha Schools is looking to upgrade, demolish, and/or refurbish the main block in historic Haleiwa, in order to make sure the buildings meet code. And yet, Kamehameha also wants to preserve, the local, rural nature that makes Haleiwa such a charming stop for so many people. Whether it's the arts and crafts, the restaurants or the incredible shave ice, Haleiwa has a lot to offer locals and visitors alike. Finding homes for artists and others with reasonable space and rent might be a challenge, but adding sidewalks and park space and better buildings has to be viewed, in the big picture, as a real plus for the area.

Summary	Some tourists take towels as souvenirs but they can cost a hotel thousands of dollars. A Miami based company called linen tracking technology has created an anti-theft device. With this system hotels are able to keep real-time inventories of linen, towels, sheets, and bath robes. Tiny radio frequency id chips are sewn into towels, robes and other linens. Hotel security would know if an item was leaving the building. On average hotels lose five to twenty percent of towels, sheets and robes every month. The chips also help a hotel keep a running inventory. Whether it's down in the laundry or up in a storage closet, we're able to see the amount of linen at each specific point. Aqua palms president Ben Rafter marvels at the technology but says he's not sold on its cost effectiveness.

Summary	There might never be a better time to show our other game face than this November when the Asia Pacific economic cooperation meetings take place here on Oahu. The "other" game face I am referring to is our business side. Everyone knows what a great place Hawai'i is to visit, and a lot of us know what an amazing place it is to live in. but common perceptions about Hawaii from business types around the globe often exclude the fact that lots of business gets done in Hawaii and new business can get done in Hawaii. Years ago, before the first dot-com bubble burst, I remember then-governor Cayetano talking about Hawaii being fertile ground for the next silicon valley, or at least a place for some companies trying to gain an edge in the competitive tech field. There was even talk back then of a mayo clinic branch coming to Hawaii, the ideal location for mingling eastern and western medicine; that never happened. Tech businesses rely on software and hardware, and the lure of Hawaii might attract.

Summary	House bill 200 cd1 passed final reading with 24 saying yes and one saying no. Senators approved a new two-year state budget. The bill was a $1.3 billion shortfall and senators made about $800 million in cuts upon the Abercrombie and Lingle budget. Lawmakers used the entire rainy day fund to balance the welfare program for this current fiscal year. The budget just approved is $11 billion for the fiscal year that starts July 1st and $10.9 billion the next year. Lawmakers closed the budget gap by increasing taxes, cutting programs and tapping into the state's savings. They also used about $42 million of the Hawaii hurricane relief fund.

The school's budget cuts will have a direct impact on students through tuition hikes and cutbacks in training opportunities on the neighbor islands. 90% of the school's medical students are from Hawaii and school officials hope that the students stay here due to the significant shortage of doctors here in the state. To offset budget cuts, the school may increase the number of out-of-state students it accepts and re-direct faculty away from the classroom and into clinical practice.

Pretty harsh words for an event that provides lots of upside for our state's top industry- tourism, and is a big event for locals, too. Now I won't disagree that the petty arguing going on between the players and owners looks pitiful to fans, as the league tries to carve out who gets how much of the huge NFL revenue pie. Some are looking at the state and are saying that childhood education is a huge issue that requires funding. But to suggest, as the governor did, that the $4-million Pro Bowl fee is somehow tied into preventing needed education funds is a stretch. The Lingle Administration estimated that the furloughs would save the state $688 million between then and now. The HGEA workers union eventually accepted 2 of the proposed 3 furlough days a month totaling 24 furlough days a year where workers were not paid, however that was not the only problem. The bigger problem people faced was the government services just weren't available to them.

Pending senate approval, this group with a wide background in various areas of business, education and philanthropy now has the unenviable task of working together amongst themselves, with the legislature, and with the education hierarchy to try and figure out how best to run and manage our public education system. Hopefully, this group will be good listeners and then really good reactors to try and move things along. More autonomy for districts; less micromanaging; more rewards for entrepreneurial thinking within the constraints of the system; more accountability and rewards for those excelling; more punitive measures for those unwilling to improve and respond to the needs of the kids? Easy questions to address on the surface, but tough to find answers when it comes to quantifying success and putting new measures into place in a system quite firmly entrenched.

Summary	If you have ever been arrested for a DUI you are probably familiar with the ignition interlock. As part of their parole, DUI offenders are required to install this system into their car at their own cost. The ignition interlock will only start the car once the driver has provided an alcohol free breath sample. Drivers are also photographed by the system when breathing into the tube.

Summary	14-year-old Hipa Seto's daily challenges should be a lesson to us all to never take life for granted. 15-months ago, he was like any other teen playing ball in his home village of Tafuna, Samoa. Then his leg began to hurt. He was on a plane to Hawaii, diagnosed with an aggressive form of bone cancer called Osteosarcoma. At Kapiolani Childrens' Medical center, doctors suggested an operation called "rotation plasty." Part of Hipa's leg would be amputated. He's the first child in the pacific to have rotation plasty and it is one of "10" surgeries he's endured. His mother says that he understands that he's special because of what he has, and he thinks his leg is the coolest thing in the world.

Summary	Kids at the Nuuanu YMCA learn to swim at an early age. The first skill to learn is to know how to tread water. Statistics could lead you to believe that a surprising number of people in Hawaii can't swim. Experts say that when it comes to drowning that it's not that the person can't swim but that it's the environment around them that they are trying to handle. Experts say that they see an increase in the number of young people and folks that may be on a summer vacation heading down to the beach during the summer months in particular that fall victims to drowning. Hawaii has one of the highest rates in the nation
