NBC BAY AREA, THE BAY AREA TODAY 6:00PM-7:00PM 4/7/15 REPORTED... The partner at Kleiner Perkins Caufield & Byers who testified in a closely-watched sex discrimination lawsuit that Ellen Pao's work wasn't compelling enough, leading her eventual firing, said Monday he is leaving the venture capital firm.General partner Matt Murphy, who led investments in mobile and business-focused startups, told The Wall Street Journal in an interview published Monday that he is leaving the influential Silicon Valley venture capital firm to pursue new opportunities, likely with a smaller VC firm. He did not give an exact date on his departure.Murphy told partners he was leaving the firm earlier this year and mentioned it last month during his lengthy testimony at the landmark sex discrimination trial against Pao. Murphy has been with the firm since 1999.Murphy, 48, arguably gave the most critical testimony during Kleiner Perkins' monthlong trial against Pao. Describing himself as a mentor, Murphy testified that Pao felt entitled, frequently did not meet job expectations and was disrespectful. He suggested Pao try contributing more "thought leadership" to become a "go-to" person at the firm.He said Pao embarrassed him by falling asleep during a board meeting, and at the end of a 60-day evaluation period in September 2012, he recommended that Pao be terminated. The firm fired Pao the following month.She subsequently sued, alleging Kleiner Perkins had a sexist culture that discriminated and retaliated against her. On March 27, a San Francisco jury rejected Pao's claims.Pao, 45, said she sued Kleiner Perkins for $16 million to force change in behavior at the firm and at other companies as well. Pao, the current interim CEO of the social networking and news site Reddit, said in a post-trial interview with Yahoo News that Murphy told the Journal he preferred helping younger startups develop rather than investing in more mature, pre-IPO companies. He said part of his inspiration for leaving was watching some of his former colleagues depart to run their own VC firms.

Families lined the hallways of the state capitol to tell lawmakers how they feel about a controversial proposal that would force parents to vaccinate their children or home-school them.I think it's frightening the state would try to take your rights away. They say you still have the right to home school but many people cannot homeschool. While the majority of the parents who lined up for hours...are opposed to mandatory vaccines, supporters of the measure came out too. Among them: 7 year old Rhett, a Marin County leukemia survivor who spoke out for kids who are put at risk by those who choose not to get immunized. I had a low immune system and I couldn't get vaccinated. We do not need to have families worry about having their children exposed to a very preventable disease and end up having children injured in the hospital, or god forbid die because we had one of these diseases.But members of the Senate education committee didn't seem sold on the bill I have a real concern about the education piece...I'm looking for the compelling state interest in doing something as draconian as I read this bill.
