Tonight on Huckabee, Becca Stevens, Founder and President of Thistle Farms, talks about sex trafficking. It is a global problem that goes into any community that has an interstate or internet. On average the women that she serves are first raped between the ages of seven and eleven, and they hit the streets between the ages of fourteen and sixteen. Poverty is what made them vulnerable. Thistle Farms provides the time, space and resources for these women to be reunited with their creator and community.

Since the global warming topic first arose, the terms "go green" and "carbon footprint" have been thrown around so often that they now are bland and empty, lacking the fiery inspiration they were coined with. But the fact remains that we all make an impact on the world we live in. The systems that we employ and the choices that we make today do have an enduring effect. Join us for this episode of Taking Care of Business and learn how personal environmental responsibility is more than taking care of the earth - it is taking care of those we love.

CBN News Reporter Dale Hurd Reports: A new book predicts "100 Million Climate Refugees by 2050." Disagree and you're likely to be labeled a "climate denier" because, we're told, "the science is settled." When NBC's Meet the Press did a special on climate change recently, skeptics were kept off the program. But the science of climate change is only settled for those who believe the climate models, or those scientists afraid of losing research dollars by denying it's a problem. Several of America's top climate scientists, like Dr. Roy Spencer, say it's not settled at all. Before becoming a Principal Research Scientist at the University of Alabama in Huntsville, Dr. Spencer was a Senior Scientist for Climate Studies at NASA's Marshall Space Flight Center. Spencer agrees the earth has warmed, and that carbon dioxide warms the atmosphere, but there are still too many other possible natural causes of the earth's warming. Is it from deep ocean circulation, or is it simply a rebound from the period known as little ice age? We're told in the media that climate change has made weather more severe, even though the statistics say otherwise. The number of large tornadoes has gone down dramatically since the 1950s. Hurricane activity in the U.S. is still at a historic low. In fact, some of the worst hurricane activity in the eastern United States was long before the widespread use of fossil fuels. The Atlantic coast of the United States was reformed by monster hurricanes that struck between the 1600s and 1800s, long before so-called greenhouse gasses and SUVs. Some were much more devastating than hurricanes that we see in the mid-Atlantic today. A piece of land at the mouth of the Chesapeake Bay is geographic testimony to the great hurricanes hundreds of years ago. Willoughby Spit in Norfolk, Virginia was created by those hurricanes. Hurricanes pushed 800 acres, more than a square mile of sand into place to create the peninsula. Today people blame cars for the weather. They used to blame witches. Records show that during little ice age, beginning in the 1500s, a lot of people were executed for the charge of using witchcraft to change the weather. French philosopher Pascal Bruckner says the climate change movement resembles "a pagan religion" that pushes an apocalyptic narrative. Meanwhile, the big loser is science, which has been corrupted by a system in which Spencer says grant money is largely only given to scientists who believe in manmade climate change. And Spencer wonders what will happen when skeptics such as himself eventually pass from the scene, while an entire generation of young people is being raised to believe the earth faces doomsday.

Few choices have as many dramatically positive outcomes as adoption. It increases the emotional, physical, and cognitive capacities of the children who are adopted. It improves the life chances of the biological mother. It saves vast amounts of money for the public. It brings much happiness, both to the adopting parents and to the adopted child. It is good for all involved and families are strengthened. Almost 25% of American households have adopted, and 135,000 children are adopted each year. But despite these impressive numbers, there's still a pressing need for greater awareness. Join us for this episode of Taking Care of Business and hear about how adoption changes lives for the better.

CBN News Reporter, Amber Strong Reports: A division between the police and certain communities is nothing new and while many enjoy an amicable relationship with law enforcement, social media shines a light on the division and broken trust. But in Indianapolis, members of the law enforcement and community leaders are hoping to exchange vantage points and walk a mile in each other's shoes all thanks to a program called One Cop. Police officers rounding the block is something this community sees almost every day. What they don't usually see is a nun or pastor in a police car or police officers seated in pews during the week. The team at One Cop believes churches are uniquely positioned to break down any walls existing between police and those they are sworn to protect. The initiative has been successfully implemented in Atlanta already. The interactive program also allows clergy to try their hand at "being officers" and facing the many challenges and pressure of split-second decisions. And that's why the program assigns officers to visit and mingle with each of the 15 congregations participating in the program. And pastors are ready to play their part as well. Wright (pastor of Warren Baptist Church) jumped at the opportunity to be a liaison and perhaps more. Local law enforcement is also eager to open doors and make a good first impression. Marion County Sheriff John Layton hopes renewing relationships can help cut down on counterproductive codes like "no snitching." Layton also wants to create and build levels of respect. While Layton blames social media for the growing antagonism, he quickly admits mistakes have been made. Even a few, however, only deepen the divide. In Texas, tensions remain high after Dallas Police officer Amber Guyger shot and killed 26-year-old faith leader Botham Jean after she entered his apartment mistaking it for her own. Community leaders there question why Guyger was able to stay on the job for so long after the shooting, or the results of Guyger's blood work on the night of the incident. Conversely, the contents of Jean's home were almost immediately leaked to the press. In October, Chicago Police Officer Jason Van Dyke was convicted of second-degree murder and 16 counts of aggregated battery in the death of 17-year-old Laquan McDonald. Van Dyke fired 16 shots into the teen after McDonald refused verbal commands to drop a knife. Original police reports that say McDonald lunged at the officers. However, dash cam video of the incident shows the teen walking away at the time of the shooting. The death sparked citywide protests. Indianapolis crime reporter Steve Jefferson points out if and when incidents like these happen, transparency and honesty are key. He credits programs like One Cop and other local faith-based initiatives for helping to calm things down. Prevention is also critical and Jefferson adds that training goes a long way. As a church deacon himself, Jefferson knows the church can play a major role in building relationships. Sheriff Layton is also optimistic about the program because he believes mutual respect and basically living by the golden rule will successfully bring churches, the community and law enforcement together.

On this emotional episode of Taking Care of Business we explore the difficult subject of youth suicide. The suicide rate for young people between the ages of 14 and 19 has jumped 70% in the past 10 years. Many feel that this coincides with the launch and popularity of many of the social media apps and platforms. Most young people don't realize that social media sites are not accurate representations of the authentic lives of those using them. Meet young people who tell their stories of how they attempted to end their lives but lived to tell about it!

CBN News Reporter Abigail Robertson Reports: It takes a village to raise a child – that’s the motto at New Life Village (http:// newlifevillage.org/about/) in Florida, a unique intergenerational community. Its goal is to reduce the number of children in foster care and provide kids in need with a loving, stable environment. Sister Claire answered that divine call by opening New Life in Tampa, Florida, where there are thousands of children in foster care. The village doors opened in 2012 after a donor provided money to purchase a partially finished Tampa housing development sitting in foreclosure. In addition to providing a supportive community for foster children, Hayden says the community also provides affordable low-income housing for residents in a city that’s short around 50,000 affordable housing homes – a problem that Hayden says is leading to a higher number of children in foster care. Sister Claire’s original plan was that residents would be parents of fostered or adopted children, or retirees willing to care for the children or community like Sister Aline, who worked with children in the mission field. But as they prepared to open their doors, Sister Claire quickly realized this community could provide help on a wider scale. So her vision expanded to include grandparents like Antonia who needed low-income housing and help with grandchildren she was suddenly raising. Vivian Bordeaux moved here after retiring from teaching and now tutors the kids. Bordeaux also helps Marquise Carter, a single parent raising his two nephews. Marquise told us many children here have been through trauma and need an understanding community. There’s along wait to get into New Life Village, but Dir. Maria Hayden tells CBN News they hope to raise the money one day to finish developing the 11 acres they’re blessed to own so they can welcome even more families into the village. Hayden shared the story of a miracle for one of their newest residents, a grandmother who took in her three grandchildren after the fourth died from child abuse, and a three-bedroom house opened at just the right time. Even with this new home and friendly surroundings, at first, the kids would not leave their grandmother’s side. But then one day Hayden saw one of the boys riding around the village on his bicycle, and she knew they were going to be okay. Residents hope the trauma will be left in the past for many of these kids now that they’re at New Life.

On this episode of Somebody’s Gotta Do It, Mike Rowe introduces us to alternative housing. His first guest is Bruce Campbell, Airplane Home Pioneer, who lives in a jetliner; an aerospace-class home. It is a sealed-pressure canister where dust and insects cannot get in from outside. Minimal plumbing requirements make it functional and it is very secure. Jetliners cost tens of millions of dollars to build. Rather than destroy them when they are ready to retire from active flight, Bruce’s focus is demonstrating that jetliners could be converted into homes. Mike’s next guest is Michael Garnier, the owner of Out’n’About Treehouse Treesort. Dating back to the turn of the century, treehouses offer an opportunity to getaway, provide a different perspective, and get you out of the normal realm.
