Asylum Seekers Win in Court as Federal Judge Rules Against Indefinite & Arbitrary Detention. We bring on a co-legal director at the Center for Gender and Refugee Studies, one of the groups that brought the challenge against the Trump administration's immigration detention policies. She explains whether Judge Boasberg's ruling will apply to any of the families of the over 2,000 children who have been separated from their parents and who the Trump administration is threatening to detain together.

From Separating Families to Jailing Asylum Seekers, Trump Admin Accused of Criminalizing Migration. The Department of Health and Human Services still has not disclosed how many migrant children they're holding who have been separated from their parents at the border. We bring on Linda Rivas, executive director and lead attorney of Las Americas Immigrant Advocacy Center in El Paso, an organization working with asylum seekers along the U.S.-Mexico border to talk about some stories of people she represents.

According to the United Nations, 13 million Congolese are in urgent need of humanitarian aid. The international media has largely ignored what's happening, but this week Vice News published a shocking investigation into a recent case of ethnic cleansing. We speak with Vice News contributor and author Nick Turse. His article is titled "A Slaughter in Silence: How a brutal ethnic cleansing campaign in DRC was made worse by Trump's 'America First' policies and the world's neglect."

We speak with an award-winning Mexican journalist who was just released from ICE detention after spending 7 months in jail. Emilio Gutiérrez Soto and his son Oscar first sought asylum in the United States in 2008 after receiving death threats for reporting on alleged corruption in the Mexican military. A federal judge has questioned whether the Trump administration's detention violated their First Amendment rights.

Today we have a Democracy Now! exclusive: "Four Days in Western Sahara: Africa's Last Colony." We break the media blockade and go to occupied Western Sahara, where peaceful protesters, led by women, are beaten in the streets. Thousands have been tortured, imprisoned, killed and disappeared while resisting the Moroccan occupation. The international media has largely ignored the occupation—in part because Morocco has routinely blocked journalists from entering Western Sahara. But in late 2016 Democracy Now! managed to get into the Western Saharan city of Laayoune, becoming the first international news team to report from the occupied territory in years.

Hurricane Florence is upon the East Coast and millions of residents in our region are bracing for impact. Even if the storm weakens, experts warn Hurricane Florence could kill thousands of farm animals and trigger catastrophic waste spills from sewage treatment plants, hog waste lagoons and chicken farms. We speak with Naeema Muhammad, organizing co-director for the North Carolina Environmental Justice Network, and Will Hendrick, staff attorney with the Waterkeeper Alliance.

As the East Coast prepares for Hurricane Florence to make landfall, fear is growing that the storm could result in catastrophic waste spills. Twenty-four toxic coal ash containment ponds in the path of the storm are at risk of flooding in the extreme rainfall. We are joined by Will Hendrick, staff attorney with the Waterkeeper Alliance; Frank Holleman, senior attorney at the Southern Environmental Law Center; and Bill McKibben, co-founder of 350.org.

Senate Judiciary Chair Chuck Grassley has set a 10 a.m. Friday morning deadline for Dr. Christine Blasey Ford to decide whether she will testify about her allegation that Supreme Court nominee Brett Kavanaugh attempted to rape her at a high school party when she was 15 years old. But Dr. Blasey Ford's lawyers say an FBI investigation into her claims should be conducted first. President Donald Trump is standing by Kavanaugh during these allegations.

As Republicans charge forward with Brett Kavanaugh's Supreme Court nominee hearing despite Dr. Christine Blasey Ford's claim that he raped her as a teenager, a new Nation investigation reveals a secret network of right-wing activists has spent millions of dollars attacking questions about Kavanaugh's stance on abortion, LGBTQ rights and executive privilege as "anti-religious bigotry." We speak with Sarah Posner about her explosive new report for The Nation, "The 'Anti-Catholic' Playbook." She is a reporting fellow at the Investigative Fund at The Nation Institute.

We sit down with documentary film maker, Michael Moore about his interaction with Donald Trump on Roseanne Barr's talk show 20 years ago. Moore, known to expose corporate America for their unfair treatment of workers, claims Trump was afraid of him. He explains Trmp's negotiation tactics and how he has a new film out about the president, called Fahrenheit 11/9.

In July, 2016, Michael Moore wrote a column titled "Five Reasons Why Trump Will Win." In it, Moore wrote, "Donald J. Trump is going to win in November. This wretched, ignorant, dangerous part-time clown and full time sociopath is going to be our next president. President Trump. Go ahead and say the words, 'cause you'll be saying them for the next four years: 'PRESIDENT TRUMP.'" He went on to list the five reasons why Trump would be elected: Trump's focus on the Midwest, "The Last Stand of the Angry White Man," "The Hillary Problem," "The Depressed Sanders Vote" and what he called the "Jesse Ventura Effect"—people voting for Trump simply to disrupt the system. We talk to Michael Moore about his predictions and how Democrats failed to take Trump more seriously.
