Service: PBS
Format: Documentary
Segment Length: 00:00:00

In one of documentary cinema's more remarkable enterprises, "49 Up" makes its U.S. broadcast premiere as the seventh in a series of films that has profiled a group of English children every seven years, beginning in 1964. Renowned director Michael Apted (Coal Miner's Daughter, Gorky Park, Gorillas in the Mist, Amazing Grace) has doggedly pursued the series as the children have grown into adults, navigating the divide between childhood dreams and adult realities. The film revisits questions of love, marriage, career, class and prejudice - discovering unexpected turns in individual lives and surprising views of the "Up" film series itself. By Michael Apted.

The long and winding campaign road: vetoing healthcare, controlling the contractors, and Justice Thomas speaks, tonight on "Washington Week." Rudy Giuliani [Former Mayor of New York] said, "I think we'll end up where we have very good quarter, probably one of the best of the Republicans." Rudy Giuliani was right, but not by much. The Republican presidential race is scrambled while the Democratic race is hardening. We take a look. The politics of children's healthcare: why the president vetoed a controversial bill. President George W. Bush stated, "Poor kids first." And why even some Republicans don't agree with him. Sen. Orrin Hatch (R-UT) said, "I think he's been given some pretty bad advice." The Blackwater brouhaha: who controls the contractors? Sen. Carolyn Maloney (D-NY), said, "Well, in America, if you committed a crime you don't pack them up and ship them out of the country in two days." The silent justice speaks: Clarence Thomas' surprising new memoir. Plus, what was this man thinking? Covering the week, Gloria Borger of CNN and "U.S. News," Chuck Babington of the Associated Press, Linda Robinson of "U.S. News and World Report," and Joan Biskupic of "USA Today."

NOW's David Brancaccio sits down with acclaimed director Michael Apted to talk about how socioeconomic status and education influence life here and in Britain. Apted discusses what he's learned from "49 Up," the seventh chapter of his groundbreaking documentary series that follows the lives of English citizens every seven years. "49 Up" premieres on "POV" October 9. Also on the show, "Off the Grid," a visit to Decorah, Iowa, where several families are going above and beyond the energy conservation call of duty by going off the electricity grid and producing their own power from renewable sources. They've given up some amenities, like air conditioning, but they haven't given up everything. Even more families who remain connected to the grid use Iowa's net metering laws to sell the extra energy they generate back to their utility company. Do they have the power to make it last?

In one of documentary cinema's more remarkable enterprises, "49 Up" makes its U.S. broadcast premiere as the seventh in a series of films that has profiled a group of English children every seven years, beginning in 1964. Renowned director Michael Apted (Coal Miner's Daughter, Gorky Park, Gorillas in the Mist, Amazing Grace) has doggedly pursued the series as the children have grown into adults, navigating the divide between childhood dreams and adult realities. The film revisits questions of love, marriage, career, class and prejudice - discovering unexpected turns in individual lives and surprising views of the "Up" film series itself. By Michael Apted.

The long and winding campaign road: vetoing healthcare, controlling the contractors, and Justice Thomas speaks, tonight on "Washington Week." Rudy Giuliani [Former Mayor of New York] said, "I think we'll end up where we have very good quarter, probably one of the best of the Republicans." Rudy Giuliani was right, but not by much. The Republican presidential race is scrambled while the Democratic race is hardening. We take a look. The politics of children's healthcare: why the president vetoed a controversial bill. President George W. Bush stated, "Poor kids first." And why even some Republicans don't agree with him. Sen. Orrin Hatch (R-UT) said, "I think he's been given some pretty bad advice." The Blackwater brouhaha: who controls the contractors? Sen. Carolyn Maloney (D-NY), said, "Well, in America, if you committed a crime you don't pack them up and ship them out of the country in two days." The silent justice speaks: Clarence Thomas' surprising new memoir. Plus, what was this man thinking? Covering the week, Gloria Borger of CNN and "U.S. News," Chuck Babington of the Associated Press, Linda Robinson of "U.S. News and World Report," and Joan Biskupic of "USA Today."

Gore vindicated, presidential candidates fighting for upper hand, and the Supreme Court tips its hand, tonight on "Washington Week." Al Gore said, "I will accept this award on behalf of all of those who have been working so long and so hard to try to get the message out about this planetary emergency." Climate change as a global and domestic issue. Former vice president Al Gore leading the way. Will presidential candidates follow? Hillary Clinton wants you to believe she is already the nominee. And Republicans are playing right along. Rudy Giuliani said, "She's going to give $5,000 to every child born in America with her picture on it." Plus, as the GOP spars over taxes, Fred Thompson finally joins the fray. Fred Thompson: "And to think I thought I was going to be the best actor on the stage." While at the Supreme Court justices weigh in on the past, the present, and the future. Covering the week, Margaret Kriz of "National Journal," John Harwood of CNBC and the "Wall Street Journal," Dan Balz of the "Washington Post," and Pete Williams of NBC News.

The premiere hour features four distinctly different artists whose works pose questions about the role of emotion, regret, fantasy and nostalgia in contemporary art. Laurie Simmons' first feature film, The Music of Regret, gave her an opportunity to bring her photography to life. Staging scenes with puppets, ventriloquist dummies and dancers costumed as everyday objects (a book, a clock, a cake), Simmons creates a nostalgic world that explores the sentiments of love and romance among family and neighbors. Lari Pittman draws inspiration from a childhood that allowed him to be creative and imaginative, as well as from an acute awareness of our country's attitude toward the gay community. His meticulously layered paintings transform decoration, pattern and signage into elaborate scenes that sweep viewers away with their dizzying complexity. Sculptor Judy Pfaff designed an exhibition around the sadness and loss she experienced following the deaths of several of her closest friends and family members. Balancing intense planning with improvisational decision-making on site, Pfaff creates a sprawling sculptural installation that explores the worlds of black and white and blends landscape and architecture into an organic whole. Pierre Huyghe uses various forms of expression to create new worlds and investigate the circulation of stories. His films, installations and public projects closely examine culture and boundaries and use playfulness and humor as a way to address complex social topics. From an expedition in Antarctica to a small-town parade, Huyghe thrives on the production and documentation of new and scripted realities.

The premiere hour features four distinctly different artists whose works pose questions about the role of emotion, regret, fantasy and nostalgia in contemporary art. Laurie Simmons' first feature film, The Music of Regret, gave her an opportunity to bring her photography to life. Staging scenes with puppets, ventriloquist dummies and dancers costumed as everyday objects (a book, a clock, a cake), Simmons creates a nostalgic world that explores the sentiments of love and romance among family and neighbors. Lari Pittman draws inspiration from a childhood that allowed him to be creative and imaginative, as well as from an acute awareness of our country's attitude toward the gay community. His meticulously layered paintings transform decoration, pattern and signage into elaborate scenes that sweep viewers away with their dizzying complexity. Sculptor Judy Pfaff designed an exhibition around the sadness and loss she experienced following the deaths of several of her closest friends and family members. Balancing intense planning with improvisational decision-making on site, Pfaff creates a sprawling sculptural installation that explores the worlds of black and white and blends landscape and architecture into an organic whole. Pierre Huyghe uses various forms of expression to create new worlds and investigate the circulation of stories. His films, installations and public projects closely examine culture and boundaries and use playfulness and humor as a way to address complex social topics. From an expedition in Antarctica to a small-town parade, Huyghe thrives on the production and documentation of new and scripted realities.

As the Earth heats up at a dangerous rate and fossil fuels become scarcer, ordinary citizens and businesses are bypassing the federal government to lead the way in exploring a clean, renewable source of power: the sun. In this report, NOVA shines a light on how and why people across America and the world are "going solar," using radiant energy of the sun to power homes, businesses, and even entire communities. But can everyday people really make a difference by using solar power? And can solar technologies, with their high cost and logistical challenges, truly play a bigger role in powering the future of humanity? The grand hopes, latest innovations, rolling controversies, and practical realities of solar power all come to the fore in this program.

With Washington stuck in place on illegal immigration policy, local governments are taking the matter into their own hands, shifting the cultural and political battleground from Pennsylvania Avenue to Main Street, USA. On Friday, October 19 at 8:30 pm (check local listings), NOW catches up with two New Jersey mayors who have sharply different - and politically surprising - approaches to dealing with undocumented immigrants in their communities. Morristown mayor Don Cresitello, a Democrat, wants to invoke a Department of Homeland Security provision that would grant his police department federal enforcement powers in dealing with illegal immigrants. "They shouldn't be here, and we shouldn't be spending that money on a population that's not supposed to be in this country," Mayor Cresitello tells NOW. An hour away, Hightstown mayor Bob Patten has turned his little town into a "Sanctuary City" - a place where law-abiding illegal immigrants are protected and embraced. "We don't ask people what their immigration status is now," says Mayor Patten. "We simply want to treat everybody justly, fairly. There's a due process." NOW's David Brancaccio visits the mayors and members of their immigrant communities to uncover the impact these measures are having, and the passions that fuel them.

Is war with Iran now more likely? New controls over private guards in Iraq, answering the California fire alarm, and what do the voters really want anyway? I'm Pete Williams sitting in for Gwen Ifill tonight on "Washington Week." Raising the stakes in the Middle East. The Bush administration comes up with new ways to punish Iran, but could they make military action more likely? Treasury Secretary Henry Paulson said, "We are taking additional steps to combat Iran's dangerous conduct." In Iraq new pressure on the hired guns. Rep. Sarbanes (D-MD.) stated, "I'm curious to know whether you regret the failures of the department." Secretary Of State Condoleezza Rice said, "I certainly regret that we did not have the kind of oversight that I would have insisted upon." Out West, raging wildfires forced the largest evacuation in California history. How did the federal government measure up this time? President George W. Bush said, "We're not going to forget you in Washington, D.C." But who really made the difference? Governor Arnold Schwarzenegger said, "From the 2003 fire we have learned a lot." And what do the voters care about? Are their priorities getting lost in campaign '08? Plus, some exciting news about what's ahead for "Washington Week." Covering these stories tonight, Helene Cooper of the "New York Times," Janine Zacharia of Bloomberg News, Spencer Hsu of the "Washington Post," and Doyle McManus of the "Los Angeles Times."

From the beginning, honeybees have played a key role in human survival. Most fruit trees and vegetable species are entirely dependent on bees to produce, and there's no artificial replacement for natural pollination. But the bees are disappearing. Massive die-offs, first reported in November 2006, are now the subject of international emergency research as scientists race to discover the cause of this ecological disaster. Could it be a disease? Is it caused by pesticides, genetically modified foods or radiation from cell phone towers? Whatever is happening, we must solve the mystery and correct the problem soon or face unimaginable consequences.

As the Earth heats up at a dangerous rate and fossil fuels become scarcer, ordinary citizens and businesses are bypassing the federal government to lead the way in exploring a clean, renewable source of power: the sun. In this report, NOVA shines a light on how and why people across America and the world are "going solar," using radiant energy of the sun to power homes, businesses, and even entire communities. But can everyday people really make a difference by using solar power? And can solar technologies, with their high cost and logistical challenges, truly play a bigger role in powering the future of humanity? The grand hopes, latest innovations, roiling controversies, and practical realities of solar power all come to the fore in this program.

In August, NOW traveled with an unlikely alliance of Evangelical Christians and leading scientists to witness the breathtaking effects of global warming on Alaska's rapidly-changing environment. Though many in the Evangelical community feel recognition of global warming is in opposition to their mission, the week-long trip inspired new thinking on the relationship between science and religion, and on our moral responsibility to protect the planet. On Friday, October 26 at 8:30 pm (check local listings), travel with NOW and the expeditionary group on a breathtaking and surprising journey to find common ground between Earth and sky. "Despite having some differences on some well known issues, our two communities clearly shared a deep and fundamental reverence for life on Earth and a profound concern about what human activity was doing to it." write Dr. Eric Chivian and Reverend Richard Cizik for NOW.

Is war with Iran now more likely? New controls over private guards in Iraq, answering the California fire alarm, and what do the voters really want anyway? I'm Pete Williams sitting in for Gwen Ifill tonight on "Washington Week." Raising the stakes in the Middle East. The Bush administration comes up with new ways to punish Iran, but could they make military action more likely? Treasury Secretary Henry Paulson said, "We are taking additional steps to combat Iran's dangerous conduct." In Iraq new pressure on the hired guns. Rep. Sarbanes (D-MD.) stated, "I'm curious to know whether you regret the failures of the department." Secretary Of State Condoleezza Rice said, "I certainly regret that we did not have the kind of oversight that I would have insisted upon." Out West, raging wildfires forced the largest evacuation in California history. How did the federal government measure up this time? President George W. Bush said, "We're not going to forget you in Washington, D.C." But who really made the difference? Governor Arnold Schwarzenegger said, "From the 2003 fire we have learned a lot." And what do the voters care about? Are their priorities getting lost in campaign '08? Plus, some exciting news about what's ahead for "Washington Week." Covering these stories tonight, Helene Cooper of the "New York Times," Janine Zacharia of Bloomberg News, Spencer Hsu of the "Washington Post," and Doyle McManus of the "Los Angeles Times."

In a provocative report from the frontiers of biology, NOVA explores new findings that call into question the long-held belief that all inherited traits are passed on by our genes. The fast-growing field of epigenetics investigates hidden influences that could affect not only our health today but that of our descendants far into the future. It now seems that our environment makes small chemical changes to our DNA without affecting the gene's overall makeup. To put it another way, epigenetics adds to our DNA another layer that acts as a control system of "switches." Experiential factors such as nutrition or stress may trigger these switches and turn genes on or off. These subtle changes can then be "remembered" and passed on from generation to generation, altering inherited traits. This means the lives of our grandparents - the air they breathed, the food they ate, even the things they saw - could have directly affected us, and that what we do could, in turn, affect our grandchildren. NOVA explores this fascinating new idea, interviewing top scientists in the field and following what could be a paradigm shift in the way we think about inheritance and genes.

What does it take for the average person to run one of the world's toughest races? NOVA finds out in a program that's both a human story and an intriguing scientific exploration of the way our bodies respond to intense exercise demands. Filmed in cooperation with the Boston Athletic Association, NOVA has been granted unprecedented access to the Boston Marathon course and will take viewers on a unique adventure inside the human body. Every year thousands of athletes from across the globe flock to Boston to run the city's marathon, known worldwide as the ultimate test of stamina and endurance. In the summer of 2006, NOVA began following 13 novices as they took the first step toward completing the 26.2-mile race in April 2007. The group of participants includes a variety of people from diverse backgrounds - a young woman running in memory of her mother, who died in a tragic car accident; a working single mom; even a former NFL linebacker - the unifying element is that not one of them is currently a runner. Over the nine-month training period, exercise and nutrition scientists and doctors at Tufts University use sophisticated technology to monitor the physical transformations that the participants undergo. Intimate interviews reveal the highs and lows along the way. The experience will demand a transformation of mind and body; NOVA cameras will be there, following every step.

With Washington stuck in place on illegal immigration policy, local governments are taking the matter into their own hands, shifting the cultural and political battleground from Pennsylvania Avenue to Main Street, USA. On Friday, October 19 at 8:30 pm (check local listings), NOW catches up with two New Jersey mayors who have sharply different - and politically surprising - approaches to dealing with undocumented immigrants in their communities. Morristown mayor Don Cresitello, a Democrat, wants to invoke a Department of Homeland Security provision that would grant his police department federal enforcement powers in dealing with illegal immigrants. "They shouldn't be here, and we shouldn't be spending that money on a population that's not supposed to be in this country," Mayor Cresitello tells NOW. An hour away, Hightstown mayor Bob Patten has turned his little town into a "Sanctuary City" - a place where law-abiding illegal immigrants are protected and embraced. "We don't ask people what their immigration status is now," says Mayor Patten. "We simply want to treat everybody justly, fairly. There's a due process." NOW's David Brancaccio visits the mayors and members of their immigrant communities to uncover the impact these measures are having, and the passions that fuel them.

Power politics between the president and Congress. Could the Cold War era be returning? And who is true blue when it comes to red state voters? I'm Alexis Simendinger sitting in for Gwen Ifill tonight on "Washington Week." President George W. Bush said, "I'm going to sprint to the finish and finish this job strong. That's one way to ensure that I am relevant." A feisty commander-in-chief shows he's ready to keep fighting, while Democrats regroup after yet another setback against the president on children's health care. Rep. Nancy Pelosi (D-CA) stated, "The president just doesn't get it." Politics and policy come to a head in Washington. While on the international front, Vladimir Putin flexes his muscles and distances himself from the U.S. on issues like Iran and democratic reforms in Russia. Is there some soul searching going on between these two leaders? And on the campaign trail, the watch word of the week among Republicans - Gov. Mitt Romney stated, "I have conservative values." Rudy Giuliani said, "I run the most conservative government." Fred Thompson said, "I've been a consistent conservative." Sen. John McCain (R-AZ) said, "Twenty-four years as a conservative Republican." Wrestling over résumés and who will carry on the conservative mantle. Covering these stories this week, Peter Baker of "The Washington Post," Karen Tumulty of "Time" magazine, James Kitfield of "National Journal," and John Dickerson of "Slate" magazine.

Is war with Iran now more likely? New controls over private guards in Iraq, answering the California fire alarm, and what do the voters really want anyway? I'm Pete Williams sitting in for Gwen Ifill tonight on "Washington Week." Raising the stakes in the Middle East. The Bush administration comes up with new ways to punish Iran, but could they make military action more likely? Treasury Secretary Henry Paulson said, "We are taking additional steps to combat Iran's dangerous conduct." In Iraq new pressure on the hired guns. Rep. Sarbanes (D-MD.) stated, "I'm curious to know whether you regret the failures of the department." Secretary Of State Condoleezza Rice said, "I certainly regret that we did not have the kind of oversight that I would have insisted upon." Out West, raging wildfires forced the largest evacuation in California history. How did the federal government measure up this time? President George W. Bush said, "We're not going to forget you in Washington, D.C." But who really made the difference? Governor Arnold Schwarzenegger said, "From the 2003 fire we have learned a lot." And what do the voters care about? Are their priorities getting lost in campaign '08? Plus, some exciting news about what's ahead for "Washington Week." Covering these stories tonight, Helene Cooper of the "New York Times," Janine Zacharia of Bloomberg News, Spencer Hsu of the "Washington Post," and Doyle McManus of the "Los Angeles Times."

What does it take for the average person to run one of the world's toughest races? NOVA finds out in a program that's both a human story and an intriguing scientific exploration of the way our bodies respond to intense exercise demands. Filmed in cooperation with the Boston Athletic Association, NOVA has been granted unprecedented access to the Boston Marathon course and will take viewers on a unique adventure inside the human body. Every year thousands of athletes from across the globe flock to Boston to run the city's marathon, known worldwide as the ultimate test of stamina and endurance. In the summer of 2006, NOVA began following 13 novices as they took the first step toward completing the 26.2-mile race in April 2007. The group of participants includes a variety of people from diverse backgrounds - a young woman running in memory of her mother, who died in a tragic car accident; a working single mom; even a former NFL linebacker - the unifying element is that not one of them is currently a runner. Over the nine-month training period, exercise and nutrition scientists and doctors at Tufts University use sophisticated technology to monitor the physical transformations that the participants undergo. Intimate interviews reveal the highs and lows along the way. The experience will demand a transformation of mind and body; NOVA cameras will be there, following every step.

As the Earth heats up at a dangerous rate and fossil fuels become scarcer, ordinary citizens and businesses are bypassing the federal government to lead the way in exploring a clean, renewable source of power: the sun. In this report, NOVA shines a light on how and why people across America and the world are "going solar," using radiant energy of the sun to power homes, businesses, and even entire communities. But can everyday people really make a difference by using solar power? And can solar technologies, with their high cost and logistical challenges, truly play a bigger role in powering the future of humanity? The grand hopes, latest innovations, roiling controversies, and practical realities of solar power all come to the fore in this program.

In a provocative report from the frontiers of biology, NOVA explores new findings that call into question the long-held belief that all inherited traits are passed on by our genes. The fast-growing field of epigenetics investigates hidden influences that could affect not only our health today but that of our descendants far into the future. It now seems that our environment makes small chemical changes to our DNA without affecting the gene's overall makeup. To put it another way, epigenetics adds to our DNA another layer that acts as a control system of "switches." Experiential factors such as nutrition or stress may trigger these switches and turn genes on or off. These subtle changes can then be "remembered" and passed on from generation to generation, altering inherited traits. This means the lives of our grandparents - the air they breathed, the food they ate, even the things they saw - could have directly affected us, and that what we do could, in turn, affect our grandchildren. NOVA explores this fascinating new idea, interviewing top scientists in the field and following what could be a paradigm shift in the way we think about inheritance and genes.

What does it take for the average person to run one of the world's toughest races? NOVA finds out in a program that's both a human story and an intriguing scientific exploration of the way our bodies respond to intense exercise demands. Filmed in cooperation with the Boston Athletic Association, NOVA has been granted unprecedented access to the Boston Marathon course and will take viewers on a unique adventure inside the human body. Every year thousands of athletes from across the globe flock to Boston to run the city's marathon, known worldwide as the ultimate test of stamina and endurance. In the summer of 2006, NOVA began following 13 novices as they took the first step toward completing the 26.2-mile race in April 2007. The group of participants includes a variety of people from diverse backgrounds - a young woman running in memory of her mother, who died in a tragic car accident; a working single mom; even a former NFL linebacker - the unifying element is that not one of them is currently a runner. Over the nine-month training period, exercise and nutrition scientists and doctors at Tufts University use sophisticated technology to monitor the physical transformations that the participants undergo. Intimate interviews reveal the highs and lows along the way. The experience will demand a transformation of mind and body; NOVA cameras will be there, following every step.

In August, NOW traveled with an unlikely alliance of Evangelical Christians and leading scientists to witness the breathtaking effects of global warming on Alaska's rapidly-changing environment. Though many in the Evangelical community feel recognition of global warming is in opposition to their mission, the week-long trip inspired new thinking on the relationship between science and religion, and on our moral responsibility to protect the planet. On Friday, October 26 at 8:30 pm (check local listings), travel with NOW and the expeditionary group on a breathtaking and surprising journey to find common ground between Earth and sky. "Despite having some differences on some well known issues, our two communities clearly shared a deep and fundamental reverence for life on Earth and a profound concern about what human activity was doing to it," write Dr. Eric Chivian and Reverend Richard Cizik for NOW.

Is war with Iran now more likely? New controls over private guards in Iraq, answering the California fire alarm, and what do the voters really want anyway? I'm Pete Williams sitting in for Gwen Ifill tonight on "Washington Week." Raising the stakes in the Middle East. The Bush administration comes up with new ways to punish Iran, but could they make military action more likely? Treasury Secretary Henry Paulson said, "We are taking additional steps to combat Iran's dangerous conduct." In Iraq new pressure on the hired guns. Rep. Sarbanes (D-MD.) stated, "I'm curious to know whether you regret the failures of the department." Secretary Of State Condoleezza Rice said, "I certainly regret that we did not have the kind of oversight that I would have insisted upon." Out West, raging wildfires forced the largest evacuation in California history. How did the federal government measure up this time? President George W. Bush said, "We're not going to forget you in Washington, D.C." But who really made the difference? Governor Arnold Schwarzenegger said, "From the 2003 fire we have learned a lot." And what do the voters care about? Are their priorities getting lost in campaign '08? Plus, some exciting news about what's ahead for "Washington Week." Covering these stories tonight, Helene Cooper of the "New York Times," Janine Zacharia of Bloomberg News, Spencer Hsu of the "Washington Post," and Doyle McManus of the "Los Angeles Times."
