PUBLIC AFFAIRS TOPIC: "Givingston" on Saturdays

GUEST: Upper Cumberland Habitat For Humanity Director Pam Ealey

Upper Cumberland Habitat For Humanity operates a retail business they call the Habitat Restore. Although the store is in Cookeville, items collected at their monthly "giving" drive in Livingston are clearly identified and proceeds from the sale of items donated by Livingston residents are directed toward projects that are done in Livingston and Overton County.

Executive Director Pam Ealey was our guest on "Focus On Community" our on-going public affairs feature which invites and hosts representatives from the community, industry, business, government, and local committees.

Mrs. Ealey told our listeners how that items collected during a "Givingston" drive (a combining of the words giving and Livingston) are sold at the Restore and how this local community directly benefits from those donations because proceeds from the sale of items donated here go directly to fund projects conducted here for the benefit of local people.

Habitat Volunteers conduct repair projects currently and are planning to construct homes for families to be able to have in the future.

Executive Director Pam Ealey is a frequent guest on our public affairs program and we are glad to help Uppere Cumberland Habit For Humanity carry on its work by informing the public of what Habitat is doing and how it benefits the community.
