CBN Washington Correspondent Caitlin Burke Reports: Recession is imminent. That's the clear consensus among U.S. economists. Although the Federal Reserve's work to bring down inflation has led to a slight drop, prices are expected to keep climbing. There's a growing belief the Fed missed the mark, overreacting to put the country right into a recession. One key factor in all of this is the money supply. In 2020, fear over a pandemic shutdown prompted the Federal Reserve to begin pumping more than $6 trillion into the U.S. economy to combat unemployment and promote economic growth. Congress injected close to another $6 trillion in stimulus-related spending. The result was an over-stimulated economy. Johns Hopkins Economics Professor Steve Hanke, a former advisor to President Ronald Reagan, says the reason for today's high inflation is that the money supply grew so quickly during the COVID economy of 2020 and 2021. Hanke believes the Federal Reserve got this one wrong. As the Fed rapidly raises interest rates, many businesses are hurting, and much less money is going into the economy. Hanke says it's now just a matter of watching the recession play out. Hanke anticipates recession to begin around the end of this year and predicts inflation will continue throughout 2023. In the meantime, he's largely ignoring economic headlines such as job reports, the dollar's status, the stock market, and unemployment numbers. Hanke is simply watching the money supply. While he can't predict the length of a recession, Hanke believes it will be significantly worse if the Fed keeps raising interest rates. He recommends a pivot that would allow smaller economic growth, rather than continuing to seek contraction.

CBN Reporter Brody Carter Reports: COVID disruptions to the global supply chain revealed the world's largest tech battle is for semiconductors, the key to dominating international technology and computing power. Semiconductor chips are basically the brains of modern electronics. You might be surprised that the United States isn't the world leader in this multi-billion-dollar industry – it's not even second. The U.S. government's goal is simply to stay ahead of China. Experts are calling it the 'chip war,' and Taiwan is stuck at the center of this fight for the world's most critical technology. The small island of Taiwan clearly dominates the world's semiconductor market. The single manufacturer Chang refers to is TSMC, Taiwan Semiconductor Manufacturing Company – and Apple is its biggest customer. Tufts University Associate Professor, Chris Miller authored "Chip War, The Fight for the World's Most Critical Technology." He tells CBN News the Taiwanese company's dominance in semiconductors makes OPEC's 40% share of world oil production pale by comparison. The chip industry is made possible by a symbiotic relationship among key countries that forms a very complex supply chain. America, the world's largest market, also makes up almost 40% of the total value of this international supply machine. It's clearly an intertwined international process. Just three years ago, China's tech giant "Huawei" was TSMC's number two customer. Then, the Trump administration tightened restrictions preventing the company from getting chips developed by the U.S. due to espionage and national security concerns. More importantly, Miller says the microchip has revolutionized American warfare. Semiconductors made in Taiwan are used in F-35 fighter jets – and a wide range of U.S. military-grade weapons and defense systems. Since the world's entire tech ecosystem can't function without these chips, that makes the sovereign island ground zero for a chip war between the U.S. and China. That's what makes the communist government's "Made in China 2025" plan to make the country dominant in global high-tech manufacturing a true threat to the U.S., both economically and militarily. It's one reason the U.S. finally responded with the Chips Act, pouring out billions of dollars to bring chip manufacturing and research back to the U.S. TSMC has committed at least $12 billion to build a chip fabrication plant in Arizona, starting in 2024. Still, neither China nor the U.S. can overtake Taiwan's production efforts and achieve self-sufficiency anytime soon. Nathan Picarsic with Foundation for Defense of Democracies says accessibility and proximity to chips is key in striving towards self-sufficiency and also strengthening national security. While Taiwan has maintained its sovereignty for more than 70 years, China still considers the island nation its property and regularly provokes it militarily. Given China's authoritarian use of technology against its own people and the potential power of semiconductors, the battle to control the world's technology and data is paramount. This evolving technology makes semiconductors even more of a national security concern, especially with progress in artificial intelligence and quantum computing. The chip war is well underway, exactly how hostile this war becomes remains to be seen.

Tonight on Praise: The collapse of Silicon Valley Bank, the second largest bank failure in U.S. History, has sent shockwaves across the financial industry. The bank catered to many of the world's most powerful tech investors. The speed of its unraveling is astounding. Forty-eight hours prior to the collapse, the bank announced that it had suffered a 1.8-billion-dollar loss and urgently needed to raise more capital to address depositor concerns. The market reacted sharply and SVB lost over 160 billion dollars in value in just twenty-four hours. As the stock fell, depositors moved quickly to withdraw their money from the bank. Because banks only carry a portion of depositors money in cash, this meant that SVB couldn't give depositors their money. Imagine that. Going to your bank to get your money and there is no money to get. The Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation responded by stepping in and taking over SVB in order to get depositors access to their money. The news of banks collapsing adds another component to these unsettling times. On top of worries over inflation, high grocery and gas prices, cost of housing. Last week during a house oversight committee hearing on COVID origin, Dr. Robert Redfield, the Former Head of the U.S. Centers of Disease Control and Prevention, told lawmakers that Anthony Fauci sidelined him from internal debates about the origin of COVID-19 at the start of the pandemic. During a separate house hearing on the weaponization of the federal government, journalists detailed how social media companies like Twitter and Facebook developed a formal system for taking in moderation requests from government agencies, including the FBI, Department of Homeland Security, and the Department of Health and Human Services, resulting in the censoring of certain viewpoints. We are living in a season where institutions that have long been trusted are proving unreliable. Yet in the midst of this instability, something spectacular is happening in our universities and the entertainment industry. Light is shining in places least expected. The flame of revival which started in Asbury is reaching more young people as it spreads to both Christian and secular universities and campuses, churches, and youth events. And now a divine outpouring is hitting theaters across the nation through the movie "Jesus Revolution." The film starring Kelsey Grammar continues to outperform expectations, making forty million dollars at the box office. Stories of lives being changed at movie theaters are emerging. There is a spiritual awakening taking place in this generation. The search for truth is underway. As Christians, how do we discern the times and what pivotal role do we play in this season? Let's join Bobby Schuller and Shawn Bolz now as they discuss the pressing matters of our day from a Christian worldview.

CBN Reporter Charlene Aaron Reports: Jonathan Fleming spent nearly 25 years in prison for a crime he didn't commit. In 1989, jurors convicted him of second-degree murder in the death of a New York drug dealer. Fleming, who also sold drugs and knew the man, said he had a solid alibi. But prosecutors argued that Fleming could have returned to Brooklyn to commit the crime. They also produced a witness who testified to seeing him pull the trigger. Fleming, however, was found guilty and spent the next 24 years of his life behind bars. Fleming said that anger consumed him until an experience he had at a church service behind bars. It was a spiritual transformation that answered long time prayers for Fleming's ex-wife Patricia Johnson. Fleming called her to tell her that he had changed. Fleming spent years trying to prove his innocence and a break finally came when new investigators along with Brooklyn's Conviction Review Unit took his case. Attorney's found evidence proving Fleming could not have been in New York at the time of the murder; information authorities never turned over to his defense team. These investigative teams, also known as Integrity Review Units, are spreading across the country. And in 2018 alone, statistics show they helped free 58 wrongfully convicted people. The eyewitness who said she saw Fleming commit the crime also recanted, and newly found witnesses implicated someone else in the murder. An Integrity Review Unit in Georgia helped to free Darrell Hall, who in 1991, had been sentenced to life in prison for possessing two grams of cocaine. Media mogul Tyler Perry gave Hall a job at his Atlanta studios. In Fleming's case, justice arrived on April 8, 2014, after almost 25 long years behind bars. While Fleming is grateful for the work of attorneys and investigators, he said the real credit goes to the Lord. That included letting go of the anger he had towards those responsible for robbing him of nearly 25 years of his life, including time he missed with his mother who passed away shortly after his release. Fleming's story, the subject of an upcoming book entitled, "24/7: Wrongfully Convicted, Rightfully Released," has already been an inspiration. Meanwhile, the state of New York awarded Fleming $6 million dollars for his wrongful incarceration. He now hopes to help others through the Jonathan Fleming Foundation.

CBN Reporter Tara Mergener Reports: Just when you think the crisis at the southern border can't get worse, it does. More than two years into the Biden presidency, illegal crossings have soared month after month to numbers never seen in the U.S. Critics were skeptical about the handful of policies the administration announced in January ahead of his first trip to the border in well over a decade. The costs and consequences of this migration tsunami are far-reaching as communities across America are left holding the bag. Meanwhile, as the crisis has spiraled out of control over the past two years, the face of migration has been changing dramatically. Emboldened by a broken immigration system and lack of enforcement, migrants swarmed across the southern border more than a quarter million times in December alone. When you look at the numbers since President Biden took office, an estimated 3 to 5 million are believed to have breached the border with more migrants on the way. Smugglers are also cashing in by helping migrants from more than 55 countries bypass authorities. In recent months, data shows the wave is traveling much further to get here. Historically citizens of Guatemala, Honduras, and El Salvador, collectively known as Central America's northern triangle, as well as Mexico, have accounted for most illegal immigration. In a dramatic shift, migrants from Cuba, Venezuela, Nicaragua, and other countries once barely represented are also being processed at unprecedented levels. In another noticeable change, most of those coming are no longer families, but single men. Still most of these breadwinners will not be able to legally work here. Meanwhile, from Texas to Arizona, and D.C. to New York, communities are scrambling for space and resources. Each migrant costs an estimated $9,000 per year for housing, food, medical, and other social services. A total of $20+ billion and counting has been spent since Biden became president, which is $4 billion more than Donald Trump's border wall. That tally is expected to keep climbing as word spreads that the southern border is open for business despite the administration's claims to the contrary.

CBN Reporter Charlene Aaron Reports: The Great Dismal Swamp once covered more than a million acres between northeastern North Carolina and southeastern Virginia. Between 1620 and the time of the Civil War, the swamp served as a thriving refuge for runaway slaves who chose to build their lives in freedom no matter the conditions. As many as 50,000 runaway slaves called maroons, an indigenous term, settled in the swamp on small rises of land known as mesic island. The escaped slaves established hidden communities in the heavily treed wetlands, building cabins and possibly farming small plots of land. Researchers believe the former slaves fed their families by hunting deer, wild turkeys, and other game, skills they may have learned from Native Americans who also sought shelter here. The runaways went to great lengths to keep their settlements secret, due to fear of being captured by slave owners. Dr. Dan Sayers, an archeologist at American University studied the maroon islands for more than ten years. Sayers realized he was onto a significant discovery and explained other artifacts found at the site. As a direct descendant of a slave who helped build the Great Dismal Swamp, Eric Sheppard of Newport News, Virginia, shares a personal connection to its history. Grandy traveled the swamp's canal and learned to navigate boats as logging operations and trade expanded at the site. He and other slaves dug the canal and several ditches by hand. After arranging to buy his freedom, Grandy dictated his story, sharing about life as a slave and working in the swamp in his narrative called, "Narrative of the Life of Moses Grandy, Late a Slave in the United States of America." He was sure to not mention his interactions with escaped slaves living deep in the swamp. While many runaway slaves made the swamp their home, others saw it as just a stop on their journey north, as part of the Underground Railroad. In 2004, the refuge was designated an important landmark on the National Underground Railroad Network to Freedom. It was the freedom maroons in the swamp preferred to living in captivity. Sheppard believes those who made their lives in the swamp were from the Zambia and Angola regions of Africa and were able to survive because of similar terrain. As a member of the Strategic Tourism Partnership between the Great Dismal Swamp National Wildlife Refuge and the Brotese Royal Establishment in Western Province, Zambia, Sheppard travels to Africa often. During trips that have become known as "homecomings," he has learned more about his ancestors who were taken captive from the region and brought to America as slaves. Meanwhile, when slavery ended in 1863, maroons living in the swamp were free to leave. Many moved to the surrounding communities of Chesapeake, Suffolk, and Norfolk, Virginia. It is a time in American history many compare to the biblical account of Israel's deliverance from bondage.

CBN Senior Washington Correspondent Jennifer Wishon Reports: Many scholars describe religious freedom as the foundation for all other human rights, but increasingly in America it's under attack. That's leading one group on a quest to educate the nation's students. Today, of course, religious freedom is a regular topic at the high court. For the last few years, Becket Law has kept an index on American Attitudes about this First Amendment protection. That's where America's First Freedom Curriculum comes in. Written by the Religious Freedom Institute, the high school curriculum complies with national social studies standards and consists of five lessons written to supplement U.S. history, world geography, and political science classes. A version for middle school students will be released this year and plans for elementary students are in the works. The goal is to arm next-generation leaders with knowledge about the one freedom that protects conscience, allows Americans to live out their faith, and makes the nation stronger. America's founders placed religious freedom at the top of the Bill of Rights. Countries that strongly protect religious liberty are more peaceful and economically stable, which benefits all citizens. Even if an education gap exists, Becket's latest information shows Americans have good instincts in this area which is generally good news for people of faith.

Cody Crouch Presents This Month in Christian History: Standing Trial. In the face of great adversity often comes some of history's greatest stories. Throughout history during the month of February many brave Christians have stood trial for their beliefs. These heroes of the faith stood for Jesus against some of the world's greatest evils. In fact, history would look very different without these fearless Christians who were willing to risk their health, their reputations, and their lives. This month we recognize the people who stood for Christ on public trial so that we may practice our faith in public and in private places. We learn about St. Valentine and the origin of Valentine's Day, Joan of Arc, Martin Niemoller, and Corrie Ten Boom.

Today on the Eric Metaxas Show: Kirk Cameron, Actor, Producer, and TV Host, talks about his show, "Takeaways" now on TBN, and his latest film, "Lifemark," an incredible story that is pro-life, pro-family, pro-love, pro-forgiveness, and about reconciliation and new beginnings. "Lifemark" is a movie that celebrates the value of life in the womb and the beauty of adoption. It was in movie theaters last summer, just weeks after the Supreme Court decision overturning Roe vs Wade and is now available on PureFlix and DVD. Kirk is co-executive producer along with the Kendrick Brothers, and even stars in the film as the adoptive dad. Later, Sarah Berger, Author and Speaker, shares her story in her latest book "Hope in the Eleventh Hour A Mother's Journey Through Grief with Eternal Eyes." Sarah tells us how she and her husband moved across the country, planted a church, and pastored for twenty-six years, then two years ago began a ministry to government officials through their non-profit ASI Ambassador Services International in D.C. They have four children, one of which lives in the kingdom. Sarah talks about how her son, Josiah, was in a car accident. She shares that when God decides to take a saint in Christ home, knowing where they are going and all that awaits them, certainly helps a parent or a family member, because they are in fact in the cloud of great witnesses. Sarah tells us knowing the word of God is prerequisite to walking through grief.

	Today on Takeaways with Kirk Cameron: A very special episode of Takeaways where we reflect on some of the most powerful and thought-provoking moments of great conversations over the last year together about the importance of life. There's no doubt the topic of life has become polarizing in today's culture. What's often missed in heated debates and in short headlines is someone's 'why' behind what they believe. What are those stories of impact that cause someone to support life? Today we're going to dive into a few of these stories from our past guests about those that have found themselves in an unplanned pregnancy, everyday people who are stopped in their tracks compelled by God to advocate for life in their communities and in their country, and stories of mothers and fathers, like Cameron and his wife, who were forever changed by the blessing of adoption. And then, of course, there are the children themselves. Kids that today can say thank you because a birth mother chose life for them, and they now live. We'll also breakdown how our culture has been impacted by the overturning of Roe vs Wade and identify resources and practical ways that the church can come alongside communities to support a culture of abundant life. In a recent year, 47,000 individuals committed suicide in this country, 70,000 people died of drug overdose and many more died because of alcohol addictions. What is happening and, more importantly, what is being done to intervene? Depression and addictions are causing more suicide related deaths than at any other time in American history. Self-harm is not always caused by a gun; often it is a drug overdose or alcohol induced event. On this edition of Taking Care of Business, see the sad realities facing our society and meet those who are trying to intervene.

700 Club NewsWatch #02102023	CBN 52:30	3:00	REC	PA/O/E	2/10/2023	2:00 PM

CBN Medical Reporter Lorie Johnson Reports: Whether we're worried about the cost of living, anxious over daily disappointments like traffic jams, or overwhelmed by negative thoughts, stress can prove toxic to our bodies. Stress activates a potent combination of hormones that influence things like our heart rate, digestion, and fat storage. Medica research increasingly points to the ill health effects that can be triggered by chronic, sustained stress, such as heightened risk for obesity, heart disease, diabetes, depression, and dementia. Dr. Epel researches how stress can damage the body, and says it goes all the way down to the cellular level. Stress triggers a chain reaction in the body that can end up shortening the telomeres – the productive caps at the ends of our chromosomes. Short telomeres often predict earlier onset of disease and death. The good news is we can turn things around before our telomeres become too short. In her book "The Stress Prescription," Dr. Epel recommends these seven ways to reduce stress. 1. Embrace uncertainty. Research during the COVID-19 pandemic showed people who reported being okay with the uncertainty of the outcome, people who said they were okay not knowing how the pandemic would end, reported much less stress than those who weren't. Epel recommends trying to avoid worrying about tomorrow, and instead focusing on the concerns of today. 2. Let go of what you can't control. Dr. Epel referenced the traditional Serenity Prayer that deals with this practice. That prayer is attributed to American theologian Reinhold Niebuhr. It was part of a sermon at the Health Evangelical Union Church in Massachusetts in 1932 and has since become a fixture in Alcoholics Anonymous and other 12-step programs. 3. Find excitement in challenges. Stress can be minimized when we turn our feelings of fear into feelings of being fierce. That involves reframing our thoughts. For example, instead of thinking, "This is so stressful, I hate this feeling," try to embrace, "This is exciting! I can appreciate this feeling!" Turn down the heat by replacing fatalistic thoughts like, "If I don't pull this off, everything will be ruined," to "I can only do my best, everything else is out of my control." When facing a challenge, it helps to relax by remembering past success and believing you have what it takes to meet the current challenge. 4. Metabolize body stress. Certain physical activities can actually help our bodies train for resilience. Dr. Epel recommends practicing "hormetic stress," which induces short, concentrated bursts of acute stress, the kind you can easily and naturally recover from. These include exercise, particularly high intensity interval training (HIIT), a blast of cold water for anywhere from 15 seconds to one minute at the end of a shower, and intense heat, such as sitting in a hot sauna for about a half an hour. Dr. Epel says these things help us "stress better," by "not having an over-activated stress response." 5. Immerse yourself in nature. Getting away from our computers and phones and all the care of the world they encapsulate can instantly reduce stress. Unplugging from regular life by going outside to a park, the woods, a river, lake, or ocean and focusing on the natural beauty and miracle of nature can help reduce blood pressure and anxiety. Believe it or not, we can also create similar sanctuaries in our own homes that can accomplish the same results. These include things like a prayer closet, where we can get away from the day-to-day cares of this life and focus on the big picture. 6. Experience deep rest. This involves slowing our normal breathing pattern so more oxygen crosses the barrier between our lungs and our blood vessels, causing nitric oxide levels to rise, which causes blood vessels to dilate, letting blood and oxygen travel more quickly through the body. This causes our blood pressure to go down, and our heart rate to drop, both of which point to reduced stress levels. Dr. Epel recommends regularly getting a good night's sleep and during the day, practicing breathing exercises, inhaling slowly through the nose with the mouth closed, deeply, so the ribs widen to the sides, and slowly exhaling through the mouth. 7. Create bliss bookends. This involves starting an ending each day feeling full of joy. This can be accomplished by waking up with a sense of gratitude and concentrating on what you're looking forward to that day. Then at the end of each day, think of the many things for which you are grateful and focus on the positive things that happen during the course of the day. In between the morning and evening "bookends," make a conscious effort to connect with people. So while we can't eliminate many of the stressors in our lives, we can respond to them differently, and hopefully feel a greater sense of peace and joy while lowering our risk for a number of health problems.

#03162023 CBN Medical Reporter Lorie Johnson Reports: You've probably heard the phrase, "everything in moderation associated with consuming junk food. It can also hold true for certain superfoods like spinach, almonds, and raspberries. Many people may believe that if a food is good for us, then eating a lot of it is even better. However, in some cases, too much of a good thing can be bad, according to some health experts like nutritionist Salley K. Norton, MPH, author of "Toxic Superfoods: How Oxalate Overload is Making You Sick and How to Get Better." A number of our healthiest plant foods like spinach chia seeds, beets, and raspberries, are high in oxalate, an often harmless chemical compound, that for some people, proves problematic if consumed in large amounts. Other high oxalate foods that are typically consumed in high amounts include quinoa, beans, and almonds. Oftentimes, these foods play prominently in gluten-free or dairy-free diets. Oxalate can attach to the minerals in our body, and prevent these important nutrients from being absorbed. One example is calcium, which is necessary for strong bones. A calcium deficiency could lead to developing brittle bones, also known as osteoporosis. Eating a lot of these high-oxalate foods can also be tied to the formation of kidney stones. Sally Norton shared her personal health transformation in hopes that others may avoid the struggles she endured. For years, she wondered why she suffered from foot pain, sleep problems, arthritis, and more. At the same time, she ate a lot of potatoes and Swiss chard. When she stopped eating those high-oxalate foods, those health problems also stopped. She says other people who are suffering from unexplained physical or mental health problems might consider examining whether they could be eating too many high-oxalate foods. She recommends people who consume lots of high-oxalate food reduce their consumption of it or replace it altogether. One example is her instruction on how to reduce spinach and chard intake. Another example is people on gluten-free diets who tend to eat a lot of high-oxalate quinoa in place of wheat products. She suggests substituting teff or buckwheat for some or all of the quinoa being consumed.

CBN Medical Reporter Lorie Johnson Reports: When it comes to our physical health, our lifestyle choices can play a large role in whether it's good or bad. For example, quitting smoking can improve our lung health, brushing and flossing our teeth goes a long way towards good dental health, and regular exercise can strengthen the heart. Good habits can also make a big difference when it comes to our mental health, according to psychiatrist Daniel Amen, a best-selling author and one of the founders of The Daniel Plan, a popular, faith-based health and weight loss program. In his new book, "Change Your Brain Every Day: Simple Daily Practices to Strengthen Your Mind, Memory, Moods, Focus, Energy, Habits, and Relationship," Dr. Amen describes dozens of lifestyle choices that can make a major difference in whether we experience either peace or anxiety, joy, or depression. Similar to a daily devotional, the book contains a year's worth of wisdom, with something to read each day, a total of 366 entries, to consider Leap Year. America is facing a mental health crisis unlike anything we've ever seen before. Far too many people struggle with depression, anxiety, and related issues. Another recent development includes the availability of constant news updates which can be a source of increased stress. Social media sites, another addition to the cultural landscape in the last decade or so, can prove emotionally harmful to adults and children. Dr. Amen draws on over 40 years of clinical practice with tens of thousands of patients, to provide the most effective daily habits for good mental health. Amen says the first step involves taking care of the brain, the organ that regulates our emotions and ideas. Dr. Amen said a brain-healthy diet consists of 70% fruits and vegetables and 30% good protein and healthy fat. Some examples are salmon and olive oil. Amen suggests avoiding processed foods and sweets. Another way to protect the brain is to keep it from being it. Dr. Amen says he treats some of his brain injury patients, like certain football players, with a protocol that includes fish oil, vitamin D and other brain-boosting supplements. Putting down our phones and instead, connecting in-person with nature and people can improve mental health. That's easier for some more than others. Screen management also goes a long way toward another habit that can dramatically improve mental health: getting a good night's sleep. Instead of letting our thoughts run wild, Dr. Amen recommends steering them in the right direction.

Tonight on Praise: Joel and Victoria Osteen, "New York Times" Best-Selling Authors, and Senior Pastors of Lakewood Church, share Joel's new book "Your Greater is Coming." The principle is we all go through difficulties. In Psalm 71 David tells us God allowed him to suffer much hardship, but God will restore him to even greater honor. God doesn't say we won't ever go through any hardship, have tough times, or people come against us. The promise is although we go through some of those things, we will come out with greater. Greater honor. Greater strength. Greater experience. Greater faith. Greater peace. Greater joy. Greater influence. Greater resources. Greater health. Greater relationships. Greater creativity. Greater favor. It's about not getting stuck in the disappoint but going to the promise believing that God has something greater coming. Develop a 'greater' mentality. Get rid of excuses. Let go of baggage from the past. Get rid of a victim mentality. Keep doing the right thing. Change the atmosphere. Pay attention to our inner dialogue. These are tests we must pass. When we don't get bitter and lose our joy it allows God to entrust us with more. God has a set time to bring things to pass. Go into the new year with a new mindset. Look forward. Joel and Victoria compare our difficulties with Sequoia trees going through a fire, surviving the fire, multiplying their seed, and ultimately becoming fireproof. We must be careful how we think because our thoughts run our life. Our life is going to follow our thoughts. It's important to pay attention to what we're thinking. Think about what God says about us. Pass the test and let challenges fuel your future. Enjoy the journey each day. Focus on the goodness of God. Trust Him and His timing. Greater is coming.

CBN Reporter Charlene Aaron Reports: Cash bail is used as a guarantee that a defendant will return to court for hearings or trial. While there are growing calls to reform the system, some say it pits the need for safety against the rights of the poor. In 2010, New York police arrested Kalief Browder for allegedly stealing a backpack in a Bronx neighborhood. Browder, who was 16 years old at the time, spent the next three years behind bars awaiting trial, something that never happened because Browder ended up taking his own life. His case points to a common problem for many who can't afford bond. According to The Civil Rights Implications of Cash Bail, a report by the US Commission on Civil Rights, more than 60 percent of defendants are detained pre-trial because they can't afford to post bail. Those numbers have moved several states to take action. For example, Illinois recently passed the "SAFE-T Act," legislation aimed at ending the state's cash bail system. On Saturday, the Illinois Supreme Court halted that law from taking effect on January 1. The law would do away with the state's cash bail system, but that's controversial because it would allow suspects charged with felonies, including second-degree murder, aggravated battery, and arson, to be released without bail. While supporters say the current bail system proves unfair to low-income defendants, Illinois law enforcement officials and prosecutors argue that it will let dangerous criminals back on the streets while sending the message that people can get away with breaking the law. Pastor Garland Hunt of The Father's House in Atlanta once served as president of Prison Fellowship and on the Georgia state board of pardons and paroles. He says while there are flaws in the criminal justice system, cash bail is needed in cases involving major crimes. As a former magistrate, Kate Trammell, Vice President of Advocacy at Prison Fellowship, is familiar with how the cash bail. She says low-income people can't always pay cash bail and end up having to stay in jail until trial, something she believes creates a two-tiered justice system. Trammell also pointed out other solutions that are fairer that don't raise safety concerns. According to the Prison Policy Initiative, there are also stark racial disparities surrounding pre-trial detention rates. Hunt said the media's portrayal of minorities also adds to the problem. Those are all reasons why Hunt believes the church's voice is needed for healing and confronting inequities in the system. It is a sentiment that Trammell shares. It is a process that many agree should provide safe communities and equity for all Americans.

CBN Reporter Mark Martin Reports: From a chip in your refrigerator to security cameras at your front door, devices like these are a part of what's called the Internet of Things or IoT. However, if you're not careful, this convenient technology can be a hacker's dream. As technology advances and people become more connected to the web, we can become overwhelmed by what's known as the "Internet of Things." The growing desire to control parts of life remotely demands a complicated system of devices, and that can be a hacker's dream. Homeowner, Bob Womack, can control his home thermostat remotely through his phone. The thermostat is part of the "Internet of Things" or IoT. From HVAC systems to kitchen appliances to garage door openers, the Internet of Things is widespread. According to one estimate, there are more than 20 billion IoT devices around the world. Other examples include medical devices and cars with built-in sensors. Karen Evan, managing director of the Cyber Readiness Institute, warns, however, that users need to be cautious when it comes to convenience. Regent University Associate Professor Alfa Nyandoro, Ph.D. agrees. And once they get in, the danger can multiply, as hackers can target the device that provides the most access. So how do you protect yourself? Evans emphasizes password protection including changing default passwords. Other tips include keeping the software updated, making sure you're "cyber ready," like being on the lookout for phony emails, and knowing what Internet of Things devices you actually have. Womack, says having an IoT thermostat did make him leery of hackers, but he believes it's worth the risk if you're on the defensive.

#02282023	CBN Reporter Gary Lane Reports: Cyberattacks increased 38% worldwide last year, and now cybersecurity experts are issuing this urgent warning – critical U.S. infrastructure security breaches and shutdowns may soon be coming. A former C.I.A. hacker turned cybersecurity analyst says the government must act before it's too late. Was the computer network failure that recently grounded all U.S. air traffic for the first time since 9/11 human error or a cyberattack? While the Federal Aviation Administration insists human error led to the outage, Canada experienced a computer outage the same day. When looking for likely suspects in such a cyberattack, Russia would be a strong possibility because of its war against Ukraine and the help U.S. and Canada are giving the Ukrainians. Given the F.A.A. software is 30 years old, cybersecurity expert Eric Cole, C.E.O. of Secure Anchor, and other cybersecurity experts say an update is long overdue. Although President Biden signed a $1.2 trillion infrastructure bill into law last November, Cole believes some critical network issues must be considered for air traffic control and other vital national computer systems. So how likely then is another shutdown or a cyberattack not only against an antiquated F.A.A. computer network but other critical government networks – just how vulnerable are they? Part of the increased vulnerability is due to COVID-19 shutdowns and working from home, now the new normal in our society. Although the F.A.A. says it has made revisions to prevent a corrupt file from damaging the flight backup database, cyber security experts say Congress and the president still need to urgently address vulnerabilities to safeguard the nation from more devastating attacks in the future.

CBN Reporter Dale Hurd Reports: Is humanity in danger from new artificial intelligence technology? Some tech experts fear it could be. Hundreds of leaders in the tech industry are calling for a pause in the development and testing of artificial intelligence technology so that the risks can be properly studied. An open letter signed by the leading voices in tech is calling for a 6-month pause in development, warning that language-based models like ChatGPT which generate human-like responses could one day attempt to replace humans and even try to rule the world. Tech leader Elon Musk warned about artificial intelligence in a 2018 interview. The release of OpenAI's chatbot has sparked a multi-billion-dollar race between Microsoft and Google to offer competitors. Christian author and faith leader Johnnie Moore is asking religious leaders to support the pause and also ask the tough questions about ethics and morality. AI expert Eliezer Yudkowsky warns that the open letter doesn't go far enough, saying "literally everyone on Earth will die" if AI is allowed to advance unchecked. George Lucas, who taught military ethics at the Naval Academy, says ethics always lag behind new technology. Concerns about the technology range from mass unemployment as AI replaces workers, to a widespread loss of privacy to weapons systems that independently decide who they should kill. Interpol has issued a new report warning the technology could be misused for fraud, cybercrime, disinformation, and social engineering.

Andrew encourages people to become their own "tech boss" because many are living very reflexively as opposed to reflectively. Who are we? This is a problem especially for young people, but also everyone who uses these gadgets. Andrew tells us we really do need a sabbath. He recommends taking back the first and last hours of your day. Those hours belong to you and your maker. Don't turn it on right away. Do some thinking, do some reflecting. Do some thinking about your near and far future, and just turn inward so that you can outward experience a better place. Do less on your gadgets (phone, tablet, laptop). Take your nose out of the screen, pick a few things that you like to do, and that will give your mind and your body an excuse to start thinking. Generally, pull yourself out of the screen, give yourself twenty minutes a day or more and do something that allows for your mind to wander.

Pastor Greg shares that the times we are living in now remind him of the late sixties and early seventies. Drug use is up, marijuana and LSD use is up dramatically. More Americans are smoking pot than cigarettes right now. This has led to a full-blown opioid epidemic. There has been a three hundred percent increase in fentanyl deaths. 300 people a day die from fentanyl. This young generation today is looking for answers. Self-harm is up 334%. Overdoses are up 119%. Anxiety and depression is up. The US suicide rate has increased dramatically since the year 2000 and it has tripled for young girls. Maybe that's why one expert dubbed generation Z the hopeless generation. This is our wakeup call. It's time to pray. Pastor Greg tells us the ultimate hope for America is a spiritual solution. On this emotional episode of Taking Care of Business we explore the difficult subject of youth suicide. Youth Suicides are now a pandemic in our country. The suicide rate for young people between the ages of 14 and 19 has jumped 70% in the past 10 years. 157,000 young people are hospitalized each year for self-harm. Many feel that this coincides with the launch and popularity of many of the social media apps and platforms. Most young people don't realize that social media sites are not accurate representations of the authentic lives of those using them. Meet young people who tell their stories of how they attempted to end their lives but lived to tell about it!

700 Club CBN NewsWatch	52:30	5:00	REC	PA/O/E	2/16/2023	2:00 PM
#02162023	CBN Reporter Abigail Robertson Reports: In just a few decades, Christians may make up less than half of the U.S. population. By 2070, Pew Research predicts the number of people in America who call themselves “nones” when it comes to religion will outnumber Christians. Much of this is due to the growing number of young Americans leaving Christianity by age 30, or those who never affiliated with the religion at all. David Kinnaman, CEO of the Barna Group, has studied the faith journeys of young people for more than 20 years and authored many books on why they leave the church. Kinnaman sees a correlation between life in the screen age and this decline in believers. Kinnaman thinks this is why more Christians need to actually live out their faith. The latest Barna study, called Open Generation, reveals a majority of Gen Z sees Jesus in a positive light. But he feels Christians need to introduce Gen Z to a God who speaks to them and can positively transform their lives. While the trends of millennials and Gen Z leaving the church may seem like bad news, Kinnaman suggests there could be a positive side. He believes this could lead to stronger, more committed churches. Kinnaman also believes churches need to focus on discipleship. Neil Cole, author of Cultivating a Life for God, agrees. Cole’s passion is making disciples and with God’s help, he developed Life Transformation Groups (LTG). These groups consist of two to three individuals of the same gender who meet together once a week, with three regular goals. First, they decide on 20 to 30 chapters of Scripture to read on their own throughout the week. Second, they ask each other tough, honest questions to help hold each other accountable. Third, they write down names of people in their lives who don’t know Jesus and pray for them. While for over 30 years, Cole has seen countless lives young and old transformed, God is currently having him focus on one specific audience. He believes Gen Z is already religious, they just don’t know Jesus Christ. As Cole helps lead this transformation, he’s expecting to see something similar to the 70s Jesus people movement occur in Gen Z that he believes will bring new disciples to Christ in droves.

Praise Greg Laurie: Jesus Revolution Film #30223	55:30	55:30	REC	PA/O/E	3/2/2023	9:00 PM

Tonight on Praise: Greg Laurie, Founder and Pastor of Harvest Christian Fellowship, along with his wife, Cathe Laurie, Founder and Director of Virtue Women's Ministry, and Jon Erwin, Filmmaker of "Jesus Revolution," discuss revival. Almost Fifty years ago, Greg and Cathe were part of one of the greatest spiritual awakenings in American history called the 'Jesus Movement' that changed a generation. This story is being told in a new film in theaters now called "Jesus Revolution." In this exclusive episode of Praise, they break down this film that is shattering all box office expectations. But more importantly, they reveal the real-life stories of those who were there and lived the Jesus Movement. Their hope is to see a revival of this magnitude happen again in this generation. Some wonder if it has already begun. We hear about students praying for hours on end at Asbury University. We see Superbowl ads talk about Jesus. Revival outbreaks are happening at other campuses as well. There's no decade that closely parallels the late sixties and early seventies than the moment we're living in right now. Back then, there were riots in the streets, racial division, and fear of a nuclear war. Today, we see conflicts in the world and our own president uses the word Armageddon in a sentence. There's the drug epidemic and the sexual revolution. Cathe shares the CDC released a new report showing thirty percent of all young women have contemplated suicide and are depressed. Cathe believes they are looking for purpose and meaning, a real connection in community. The same things they were looking for are the same things that GenZs are looking for today. Erwin believes that when we are at our lowest, that is when God breaks

					Today on Takeaways with Kirk Cameron: Pop culture tells us you are what you accomplish, you're as good as how much you contribute to society or what level of success you achieve. How many of us fall into this trap of never amounting to being enough? Do we truly believe our worth is measured by the Imago Dei God's very image stamped on every life? Today on Takeaways we're joined by two powerful women, Joni Eareckson Tada, Founder and CEO of Joni and Friends and Laura Wifler, Co-Founder of Risen Motherhood, whose lives flipped conventional wisdom on its head and show how God's glory is displayed through people with disabilities. We'll discover the unseen challenges and blessings of caring for someone with a disability and how God has purpose for every single life.

					Tonight on Huckabee: Sean Spicer, Author of "The Parrots Go Banannas!," Former White House Press Secretary, and Host of "Spicer & Co.," tells us a lot of kids can relate to being accused of something false, but more importantly there are a lot of times where kids are urged to jump on the bandwagon. He hopes to teach kids through his book to assume the good in people, that they've done the right thing, and good people do good things. He tells us so many kids are facing forces from the internet and society that as parents we look over our shoulder to say what are you getting, what are reading, and what are you learning at school? His book provides content that is appropriate for any age.
